PUBLIC SCHOOL CRICKET.

By CAPT. W. J. SETON.

Before embarking upon the subject of this article, I would ask the readers of Wisden to permit me to pay a humble, but sincere tribute to the memory of my predecessor in this work, whose friendship I had the privilege of enjoying for thirty years. In the seventies, the prospect of a tutor in the holidays, usually so distasteful to a small boy at a private school, was a cause of pride and satisfaction to me, when I learned that the said tutor was actually the Cambridge Blue whom I had seen make top score for his 'Varsity at Lord's the previous year. From tutor and pupil, we became, in after years, fellow Incogs in many an enjoyable match, and later, fellow critics of the great game, for many seasons, in the Pavilion at Lord's. Throughout those years "Bill" Ford was always the same genial, hearty friend, and now, when looking on at matches at Lord's, there always seems something lacking, since he is no longer with us. In endeavouring to take up his work, where he was forced to leave it, I would ask my readers to extend to me more than the usual indulgence granted to beginners, as I am following one who combined mature judgment and sound criticism with a long and careful study of his subject, through many seasons.

The season of 1904 was undoubtedly the season of "records" for Public School Cricket. For a schoolboy to take part in county cricket throughout August, and head the first-class bowling analyses with a genuine analysis for nearly fifty wickets, as J. N. Crawford did, is a record that will probably stand even longer than Sir Emilius Bayley-Laurie's score for the Eton and Harrow match, now deprived of its pride of place after a reign of sixty-three years. Then the record number of runs made by a player in public school cricket no longer stands to the credit of Raphael, but is placed against the name of Tebbutt of Leys School, as is also a list of eight centuries in one season, a number that will probably not be exceeded until the squaring of the circle is accomplished, or an equally improbable event occurs—the advent of a second W. G. The Winchester XI. by going through the season without defeat and yet only achieving one victory also accomplished what I should imagine was an unprecedented performance, and one that entitles our oldest school to the first place among the Public Schools of the season.

The WINCHESTER XI. contained no less than five batsmen who had averages of over 35, four of whom were century makers, while every man in the team had a double figure average! Wright, Bruce, Teesdale, Gordon, and Evans, in their varying styles, were a formidable array of batsmen. Evans also assisted in the attack, the mainstay of which, however, was Younger, a medium-paced left-hander, who possessed the quality, unusual in schoolboy bowlers, of keeping up his length, undeterred by mistakes in the field, from which he was a considerable sufferer. Sergeant also was a fast bowler of considerable promise, while Wright varied the nature of the attack, when he surrendered the gloves to a colleague, and put himself on with lobs, which occasionally got a wicket. Wright proved himself a thoroughly capable captain, and much of the success of the team should be attributed to his leadership, while as a wicket-keeper he reached a high standard of excellence. The performance of the eleven in defeating a very powerful Eton XI. by steady bowling and sound batting on the second day, after a very even first day's play, and their play against Haverford College, not to mention their avoidance of defeat in all their matches, entitles them to be considered the best eleven of the year, and the best that has represented Winchester for the last dozen years. There was only one department in which they fell short, and that was fielding, catches being missed, and matches in consequence drawn, instead of being won, but the long-standing reputation of Winchester fielding leads one to expect a higher standard in that department from their eleven than from those of other schools. It was in this very department, however, that Eton—Winchester's younger sister—excelled. Campbell, the captain, set his team an example of brilliance that was loyally followed, especially by Severne, who shares with his captain the distinction of being the best fieldsman of an excellent fielding side. This excellence in fielding was particularly noticeable during the long six hours' struggle, on the second day at Lord's, when Harrow was so doggedly striving to avoid defeat. In bowling, much was expected of Hatfeild after his meteor-like appearance in 1903, when, unknown to fame and the Eton XI. against Winchester, he secured his place for Lord's, and disposed of twelve Harrow wickets. Handicapped by a bad knee during the past season he played but little cricket before the Winchester match, and in that he could only bowl a couple of overs in the second innings. At Lord's, though not approaching his previous year's success, he did much to secure the victory of his side by steady bowling that took six wickets. Horlick proved himself another steady bowler, while Severne and Boles added to their usefulness by taking wickets as changes. Tod failed to come up to expectations. As, however, he captains the team next year, he will have another opportunity of reinstating himself as a bowler. In batting, the performance of Boles at Lord's showed him to possess every quality of a fine batsman; self-restraint to an exceptional degree was exhibited for a considerable part of his innings, and then powers of hitting that must have been an unpleasing revelation to the wearied Harrow fieldsmen. His innings will cause his name to be handed down to all future generations of Etonians, but his reputation as the best bat in the Eton XI. was established before he confirmed it so amply at Lord's. Tod ably assisted Boles at Lord's, and is a really good bat, while Campbell showed his true form in the first innings against Winchester, though failing against Harrow, as did Astor, who, however, showed his powers of playing an uphill game by making more than half the runs scored in the second innings and carrying his bat against Winchester. Fairly and squarely beaten by Winchester, for no Etonian would suggest that Hatfeild's inability to bowl in the second innings was the cause of his school's defeat, the Eton XI. asserted themselves at Lord's, and proved themselves a far better side than their plucky opponents. Moreover, they were one of the two schools (Malvern being the other) who were equal to the task of defeating Haverford.

HARROW were an eleven that had misfortunes to contend with, previous to meeting an unusually strong side at Lord's. Dear as a victory over Harrow is to an Etonian, every Etonian, past and present, would have wished the eleven to meet the full strength of the School on the Hill, be the result what it may, and Eton's sympathy goes out to Harrow for the absence of her best all-round player from Lord's, and to Rattigan himself for the sad fatality that caused that absence. Wet wickets early in the season, contrasting strongly with the nearly perfect wickets on which Winchester played their matches, renders comparison of averages unavailing. Bolton, however, can show an average of over thirty, without a not out innings, while his highest score of 64 was made in that disastrous first innings at Lord's, when the rest of the eleven could only contribute 41 runs. He stands out as the best bat in the team. Forster played well early in the season but, after straining his back, failed to keep up his form. Baily, on the other hand, possibly owing to the cares of captaincy, made fewer runs in the earlier matches than he did in his great innings at Lord's. Crake, also, and Brandt reserved their highest scores till that prolonged effort made by the eleven in the second innings against Eton. Unsuccessful though the Harrow XI. were this season, inexcusable as the collapse of all save Bolton in the first innings may have been, let every credit be given to the batsmen, who, after fielding out for over 400 runs, made such a dogged and determined fight for their school against Eton and the clock. Baily, as wicket-keeper, seemed more suited to fast bowling than to slow, and did not avail himself of chances of stumping, but it was in fielding that many runs and chances were thrown away Brandt and Eiloart, however, being notable exceptions in this respect. In the absence of Rattigan, the bowling devolved upon Morris, who was useful, and the two Reunerts, the elder of whom is steady, while Humphreys as a fast bowler should show improvement, but taken as a whole, the bowling can only be termed moderate. As most of the team are young, there is promise for the future, and doubtless this eclipse of the brilliant light of Harrow cricket is only temporary.

WESTMINSTER, like Harrow, seemed to have struck a "bad patch" last season. With seven old "pinks" remaining from previous years, hopes were entertained of a successful year, but a series of defeats in the first few matches seemed to take the heart out of the eleven. Against Charterhouse, at one time, they seemed to have the match in hand, having scored 224, and secured five wickets for 50, but defeat was in store for them. The three best bats in the team, Kirkpatrick, Rawlings, and Walters, all came off in this match, but as the highest average of the three for the season is under 22, they must be regarded as somewhat unreliable. The cares of captaincy found another victim in Gardner, who seemed unable to do himself justice either in batting or bowling, and is to be commiserated on his complete failure against Charterhouse. Kirkpatrick took some wickets, but Hepburn must be regarded as the best of the bowlers, and at times, when the wicket suited him, displayed considerable skill. The side seemed easily disheartened and unable to contend against bad luck, while the fielding was affected by the frequent despondency that came over the team.

CHARTERHOUSE were a team that improved as the season progressed, but did not come up to the standard of the last two years, the absence of Branston being of course severely felt. However, in the school matches, Charterhouse had the happy knack of providing a century maker, and, against Westminster, a brace of them. Hooman, in conjunction with Somers, by a prolonged stand after five wickets had fallen for 50, converted an impending defeat into a victory. Hooman's hitting was particularly fine in this match in both innings, 28 runs in one over being a notable achievement. Against Wellington also he played finely for 78, but was surpassed by Blagrove who scored 121, the two innings being the chief factors in a victory by 130 runs. Against Haverford, yet another big scorer appeared in the person of Buchanan, who appears to be the most promising player in the eleven, and will remain at the school to be captain next year. Payne failed to do himself justice as a bat, but repaired that omission to a certain extent by developing into a useful change bowler. He showed his true form, however, in the match at Lord's, for the Public Schools' XI. Somers showed himself a cool and determined player at a crisis, and made his big score against Westminster when runs were urgently needed. Cripps, the captain, must be added to the list of those who fail in batting when the cares of captaincy usurp their attention. His leadership was energetic and excellent, and he varied the somewhat moderate bowling at his disposal with consummate judgment. Stranach improved as a wicket-keeper by practice, but was somewhat generous to his opponents in the matter of extras. Reference has been made to the moderate nature of the bowling. Kemp-Welch was the best, and most unfortunate in the matter of unaccepted chances, though Gilbert took most wickets, and Buchanan also had a better analysis. The ground fielding was very fair, but many catches were missed, Cripps, Norman, and Buchanan being rather superior to the rest of the team. The mention of Charterhouse's victory over WELLINGTON leads us to consider the performances of the latter school, which were quite as good as could be expected from a young and inexperienced team without any old choices. The task that devolved upon Berrington, of forming an eleven from absolutely new material might well have unnerved a far more experienced cricketer, and he was another of the captains who failed to show their true form as batsmen, though he must be given every credit for his fine effort against Charterhouse, when he set his team an admirable example. Drysdale also performed well against Charterhouse and made a great attempt to save the match against Haileybury, scoring 114. Robertson also played in determined fashion against Haileybury, his two excellent innings amounting to over 100 runs for the match. These two, with averages of 32 and 29 respectively, were the best bats on the side. Fowle, Vigers, and Marshall are free hitters, but somewhat unversed in the art of selecting the right ball to hit. The bowling was admittedly weak and lacking in variety, Fowle, Marshall, and Robertson being all medium right-hand. Drysdale, however, shows promise, and, by taking eight wickets for 27 runs, must have startled and surprised the Zingari XI. The defeat of I. Z. was the best performance of the year though the Old Boys' match was also won. The wicket-keeper, Walker, naturally could not rival his predecessor Payne, but he proved himself of average merit. Fowle was brilliant in the field and Drysdale very good at slip. The others were good in most matches, but seemed to have united in selecting as their "off" day a most undesirable one, viz. the Charterhouse match, in which the fielding was generally bad, Hooman and Blagrove being each badly missed early in the innings.

HAILEYBURY, the conquerers of Wellington and Cheltenham, possessed two bats that stood out above the others in Bignell and Heymann. Both made over 500 runs in the season, and Bignell made over 50 for the Public School's XI. at Lord's. Heymann took also more than 50 wickets, his all-round performance ranking little below Crawford's for Repton. The eleven seemed to rely too much on these two, as, except Rigby, who with Bignell materially assisted to win the Wellington match, the others seemed rather free than trustworthy batsmen. Heymann occasionally found his double duty of making runs as well as getting the other side out, too much for him, and was sometimes unable to do himself justice as a bowler in consequence of a long and tiring spell at the wickets. His consistency was remarkable as an average of 42 without a century shows, and he opportunely omitted to score heavily against Wellington with the result that he took nine wickets. Cheltenham also provided him with eleven victims, as he did not fail to take full advantage of the difficult wicket. Against the M.C.C., moreover, he found a pitch to his liking and secured seven wickets for 18 runs. Dibdin occasionally proved useful as a change, and Bostock showed promise both as batsman and bowler. Howard as a bat did not come up to expectation, though he rose to the occasion against Wellington, making over 60 runs for once out. The three bowlers were also among the best fieldsmen on the side, the majority of whom were useful, while Bond may be described as brilliant in the long field; the whole team fielded excellently against Cheltenham at Lord's, and secured a handsome victory in an innings, making the most of their advantage, though it certainly was an advantage, to win the toss.

From RADLEY comes the pleasing news of a team who relied for success more on their ability to get their opponents out than on their power of making runs, but satisfaction at this must be tempered with regret that frequent catches were missed. To reverse the usual order of departments, in which I have considered previous elevens, the catching was excellent in practice, but faulty in matches. The ground fielding was good as a rule, Robinson being brilliant at cover, and had catches been held off Blencowe, he would have had a remarkable analysis. Blencowe is slow left hand and tempts people to hit, and when they hit the ball often goes up in the air; hence the need of holding catches. Fox, at the other end, supplied leg breaks and got several customers, especially in the Bradfield match. Worsley, the captain, was far and away the best bat, and the team usually backed him up when he made a good score, but occasionally Worsley's failures spelt disaster to the batting of the others, though the Bradfield match was in this respect a notable exception. As most of the team stay on, even a more successful season should be in store.

BRADFIELD, defeated by Radley, had previously administered to Sherborne their only defeat of the season, by plucky up-hill cricket, after being behind at the conclusion of the two first innings. Against Radley the batting failed, and the fielding, never the strong point of the eleven, got demoralised. Ling captained the team with judgment, and improved as a wicket-keeper; as a bat he was consistent and trustworthy. Bernard, who heads the averages, played some good innings, but at other times got himself out. Robinson and Thornhill gave fair assistance in batting, Thornhill being in addition the most dependable bowler on the side, though Grant and Boyle had better analyses. In fielding, one finds the oft re-iterated complaint of slackness and inability to hold catches, de la Cour being a brilliant exception.

SHERBORNE has a different tale to tell from most schools. The fielding was without exception excellent, and the wicket-keeper, May, showed great promise; he combined with Jesson's leg breaks most successfully, as over enterprising batsmen at St. Paul's found to their cost. Jesson secured over 50 wickets, and stands out among the best public school bowlers of the season. In batting, there were a good even lot of bats among the first seven, who all averaged over 20, Homfray, who topped the averages with nearly 36, being the pick. Ross again captains the team next season, and will have May, Jesson, and four other old choices assisting him, so there should be a bright future in store for Sherborne cricket. St. Paul's were easily defeated, Jesson taking eight wickets, four of them with the assistance of May. The defeat by Bradfield has been referred to, and without disparaging the success of Bradfield, Sherborne showed better form in the other matches.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, in addition to playing Sherborne, opposed three other school teams, an example which I venture to urge might be followed with advantage in other places. When two schools meet, the keenness displayed on both sides is a surer test of genuine cricket than matches against clubs, when the opposing team (captained very often by one of the school-masters) is not allowed to "break the boys' hearts, etc., etc." as my predecessor so emphatically described, and condemned, in his article on this topic last year. St. Paul's succumbed to Sherborne, to whose brilliant fielding a compliment, deserved by the victors and honourable to both sides, is paid gracefully by the Pauline Secretary. Dulwich also gained a brilliant victory, in spite of the sustained effort of Geary, who made 88, but the absence of Smyth, the best all-round man at St. Paul's, was a severe handicap to his side. The other two matches afforded exciting finishes. Brighton were defeated owing to their last wicket being captured off the fourth ball of the last over! Bedford Grammar School had one wicket to fall, and were 71 runs behind when time was called! It is good to play in such matches which remain long in the memory, and provide "The joy of eventful living!" Geary was the best bat in the eleven, and scored well against Dulwich, and also against Sherborne, in the second innings: Smyth, in the other two school matches, made good scores, and Wakelin proved a steady bat, and a captain invaluable to the team. Bolton and Smyth took their wickets cheaply, considering the season, and Munton was a useful change. The fielding was undeniably good, Smyth and Wakelin being the pick, the latter probably adding an additional record to those I mentioned at the beginning of this article, by not missing a single catch! Let us hope he will play for some first-class county, and, continuing his form of this season, set a much-needed example to older cricketers.

DULWICH were a team that improved as the season went on, and much of the improvement is due to the excellent captaincy of Knowles. Owing to the wicket at Dulwich being on London clay, run-getting was a matter of difficulty, and the averages are low. Firth stands out as the most consistent bat of the team, and as he is only sixteen, there should be a brilliant future before him. Kiddle and Knowles also performed well, though the cares of captaincy seem to have had their usual effect on the latter's batting. Kiddle and Betham were the most trustworthy bowlers, of whom the former proved the more successful: while Kerr, Langdon, and Lindsey provided changes which were utilised by Knowles with excellent judgment. The team improved by practice into a good fielding side, and had a plucky wicket-keeper in Goggs. Their first two school matches, against Bedford and Tonbridge, resulted in defeats; the last two, against Brighton and St. Paul's, in victories, owing in a great measure to Knowles having worked up his men and got them together. As eight of the eleven are staying on, there are hopes of a successful season next summer.

FELSTED suffered from the not unusual complaint of being unable to get the other side out. Preston, the captain, had a good deal of work placed upon him in the bowling line and was consistent; against Highgate he took six wickets in a most exciting match, lost by five runs. Murray-Shirreff bowled well against King's School, Canterbury, and Thomas sometimes got wickets. Preston and Jewell stood out as the best bats, and as it occurred to each of them to make a century against King's School, Canterbury, the result was a brilliant win for their side. Against Leys School, they had to play for a draw and got it. Hankin, a good bat, was seldom able to assist the School, while Davies frequently tried to hit, and, against the old Boys, succeeded in his efforts. Jewell enhanced his value to the team by developing into a capable wicket-keeper.

KING'S SCHOOL, CANTERBURY, had one player who calls for mention in Huyshe, their wicket-keeper. Against Felsted he made a fine effort to save the match with an innings of 88, and the excellence of his keeping may be judged by his performance for Dorsetshire in the holidays, when in an innings of 518 by Hertfordshire, he only let two balls pass him. His career at Oxford will be awaited with interest.

LEYS SCHOOL also claim recognition on account of Tebbutt's remarkable success as a batsman. Centuries came from his bat with great regularity, Felsted fielding out for his seventh, and Bedford County School for his eighth, while his average number of runs seems to rival Tom Hayward's for the same period. Tebbutt's batting for the Public Schools eleven at Lord's maintained his school reputation. Owing to lack of information, I must dismiss the Leys eleven as Tebbutt et praeterea nihil.

LANCING had a fine scoring side, Brisley, their captain, averaging 48 without a century. Greenfield, Stephens, Powell, Wade and Mathieson backed him up well. Greenfield also proved the best bowler, Wade, Stephens and his brother assisting him, while Mathieson is distinctly above school-boy form as a wicket-keeper. The fielding was very smart, Chiazzari being exceptionally brilliant. Hurst College and Christ Hospital were victims to Lancing. Leatherhead School narrowly escaped the same fate, and Brighton effected an even draw. Brisley stays on another year, before proceeding to Cambridge.

From distant ROSSALL I learn that they had a fine all-round cricketer in Mugliston, their captain, with Powell to support him in the bowling line, and Stafford and Peltzer in batting. The latter also is the finest field in the best fielding side Rossall has ever had. May the influence that brought this about in Lancashire be brought to bear on some of our Southern schools. It is unfortunate that owing to illness, not at Rossall, neither of the school matches against Shrewsbury and Loretto could be played.

From BEDFORD GRAMMAR SCHOOL, I learn the cheering news that the bowling was the feature of the season's cricket. Peel was most consistent, but Joyce took most wickets, while Barraud and Clamp rendered assistance. J. G. Milton, the International, was captain, and with Alexander and Joyce, proved the pick of the bats. The fielding also was of a nature that gave encouragement to the bowlers. In addition to the matches with Dulwich and St. Paul's, already referred to in the paragraphs about those schools, Merchant Taylors were severely defeated.

FOREST SCHOOL has rather a dismal record of failure. The eleven played Merchant Taylors, which resulted in an even and exciting draw, and some other schools, achieving only one victory, over Eltham College. Much of the work devolved upon Waugh, who made a century and had an average of 32, while he and Bonsey, the captain, shared the bowling with a little assistance from Watson. The fielding, however, was sadly to seek, ground fielding being slovenly as well as catches being missed to the number of twenty in one match. Does this furnish yet another record in this eventful season? This state of affairs at Forest School should be remedied in future years.

HIGHGATE seem to have had a fair bat in Lushington, who, improving as the season went on, had an average of 24. Honeyball and the two Sayers can scarcely be termed consistent, but the first-named played an opportune innings that won the Felsted match. These three, with the assistance of Cox and Fendick, made what can only be termed a moderate lot of bowlers.

From BRIGHTON the account is encouraging, and though the team was not equal to those of the anni mirabiles, when Cotterill, Wilson, Woods, and Cooper made the side so formidable, it was better than it has been for a good many years. Belcher proved an excellent captain and good all-round player, making over 400 runs and taking 50 wickets at the small cost of 12 runs each. His career at Cambridge should be watched with interest. Morrice conducted the attack from the other end, but change bowlers were scarce. In addition to Belcher, Shallow, and Blatch constantly made runs, and a good many members of the side fielded well, Wheeler and Bartley and the two Shallows following their captain's excellent example in this department. No fewer than five schools were opposed: Merchant Taylors' and Christ's Hospital being easily defeated, Dulwich and St. Paul's proving victorious, and Lancing playing a drawn game.

To make a departure into the Midlands and West of England, after dallying so long round London and in the South; RUGBY though an improving side, failed against Marlborough and suffered a nine wickets defeat. Burton in both innings, and Chadwick and Sloman each in one, made a determined effort to save the match. The weakness of the bowling may be realized from the fact that 300 went up with only two Marlborough wickets down.

Then a curious thing occurred. Tripp, the Rugby captain, who had bowled lobs without success, realizing that desperate situations require desperate remedies, resorted to an unwonted overhand action and got five wickets at small cost. All credit to him for the success of his daring experiment. The fact that the bowling was exceedingly weak is shown by the fact that all the bowlers averaged over 20 runs a wicket. Beattie, Bowring, Tripp, Ruault, and Gordon made an attacking force, whose success somewhat resembled the success of the Russian attacking force in Manchuria. Bowring, Tripp, Chadwick, Barton, and Sloman made the most runs, while the fielding can only be described as fair, catches being plentifully missed at Lord's.

MARLBOROUGH thoroughly deserved their win at Lord's, and may be considered to have had the best of a drawn game against Cheltenham. Scott, the captain, set an excellent example to the team, and though at times he would get out for a very small score, he set the seal on his reputation as a batsman, by a fine innings at Lord's. He was well assisted by Goodwin, Butterworth, Ireland, and Milton, all of whom made over 400 runs, and had averages just under, or a little over, 30. These batsmen seemed to have some admirable arrangement between them never all to fail and never all to come off together, with the result that the eleven could usually be reckoned upon to make a good score. In bowling, Scott had Robinson, Goodwin, and Phillips to assist him, and rang the changes with judgment, but the attack was not strong enough to get a good side out. Fielding was fair without being brilliant, and compared very unfavourably with that of Haverford, who administered a severe defeat, in spite of a determined effort by Goodwin in each innings.

CHELTHENHAM undoubtedly, had a very fine bat in Salter, and in the event of his making runs (which he did to the tune of nearly 1000 in the season, with an average of over 66—easily the record for the school), others, notably Mackenzie and Tennant could get runs also. Salter scored over 100 in the two innings against Marlborough, and a century against Clifton, both of which matches were drawn. Against Haileybury he failed, and so did the rest of the side, the result being a defeat in an innings, though, as I mentioned before, the winning of the toss secured to Haileybury a great advantage. Still the team failed in their attempt to play an uphill game. Salter, who is only seventeen, stands out as one of the most successful bats of the year, and obtained four centuries in succession for the school with a fifth one, against East Gloucestershire for another team, inserted in the sequence. Mackenzie is a fine free player, and Tennant a good one, who was unconquered in each innings in the Public Schools eleven match at Lord's, and made runs each time. Smythies, the most reliable bowler, was injured in the Clifton match, which caused a lot of work to fall upon Peel, as the other bowlers were not of much account, while the fielding can be described as slow on the ground and uncertain in the air, though Slater and Rawson held catches, and Taylor proved a fair wicket-keeper.

CLIFTON had the fortune to have a really first-class wicket keeper, as well as a consistent bat in Imlay, their captain. He was supported by several others of good average merit, Crew and Pilcher being the most stylish, and Hanson and Fuller-Eberle the most promising and capable of improvement. Champion played a first-rate innings against Cheltenham, and the whole team deserve credit for passing their opponents' huge score. As a bowler, Methuen should develop into a first-class one, combining as he does, a swerve from the off and a leg-break. Dobson got some wickets but was erratic, while Pilcher and Evershed (who will doubtless keep the family name prominent in cricket annals in the future, as his father, the Derbyshire cricketer, has in the past) got their wickets at less cost than the others. In fielding also it is gratifying to find there was much brilliancy. Reference has already been made to Imlay's wicket-keeping, and the eleven were fortunate enough to have also a good understudy with the gloves in Fuller Eberle. This player was also a fine field without the gloves, as was Evershed, but Champion seems to be superior even to these fine fieldsmen, and to save more runs each innings than a good bat usually makes. Would there were more of his calibre to raise the present low standard of ordinary school fielding.

UPPINGHAM had two batsmen who stood out by themselves—Hurst, who saved his side from defeat by Malvern, and made a determined, but unsuccessful, effort against Repton, and Palmer, whose sensational play enabled them to defeat Haileybury. Hurst has an average of over 50, and took most wickets but at a considerable cost, though he heads the analyses. Palmer, who appeared for Middlesex in August, should have a great career before him at Cambridge, if he continues to rise to the occasion as he did against Haileybury, when having a great responsibility upon him, he played himself in steadily, and then hit with such vigour that he scored 216 in just over two hours and a half, and won the match. Hurst stays another year and is evidently a fine free scoring bat, who like Palmer, can do his best work when much depends on him. The bowling was varied but not very successful, Lowe, Swindells, and Johnson assisting Hurst to get wickets, but not at all cheaply. Fielding, it is encouraging to learn, was a department in which the eleven excelled.

MALVERN had two familiar Malvernian names—Day and Foster—at the head of the batting averages, and most worthily do these younger members uphold the reputation made for their families by their elder brothers. The name of Foster might well be expected to be at the head of the Malvern averages and aggregates, especially when the average attached to it is over 50, and the aggregate over 700. But excellent as this performance is, it has to yield pride of place, in both columns, to Day whose figures show an aggregate of nearly 900, and an average of 67. Fortunate indeed the school that possesses two such bats at the same time, and unfortunate their opponents, as Uppingham and Haverford know to their cost, each of these teams having to field out against centuries from both Day and Foster. Day is not going to the same 'Varsity as his brother, S. H., for which Oxonians should be devoutly thankful, as in one and the same week, meeting Oxford bowling twice, he showed his appreciation of it by securing 172 against the Harlequins, and then helping himself, even more liberally, from the New College bowling, his score in that match being 201. Let men of Kent and Kentish men alike pray that he may find time, as his brother does, to assist their county.

Foster, not always content to play second fiddle to Day, in the Repton match eclipsed his colleague by scoring 79 and 43 against Crawford, the best public school bowler of the year. His efforts were unavailing to save his side, but it is interesting to note in this contest of schoolboy champions, that Day got Crawford out in the first innings, and Foster bowled him in the second, Crawford having previously bowled Day in the first and Foster in the second innings of Malvern. A pretty interchange of compliments and creditable to all concerned! Repton might not have secured their victory over Malvern, had Cornelius been able to play, and taken a century off them as he did last year. The Sanatorium unfortunately claimed him as an inmate for a great portion of the term, but as he remains to captain the team next year, let all cricketers wish him success and a return to his form of the previous year. Mellin played pluckily against Repton, but had to be content with 51 instead of the hundred he compiled the previous year. Simms, Aste, and Mann, all promising bats, remain on to assist Cornelius, the first named being, with Pearson, the mainstay of the bowling, with Day as a change, but the attack undoubtedly was weak. The team proved themselves an average fielding side, though Cornelius's absence was sadly felt, his fielding being a revelation, and an example even to Haverford.

It is possible that impatient readers (Reptonians and Surreyites in particular) may be saying, as they wade through my observations (if they take the trouble to wade) "The writer has heard "about Crawford, as he mentions him on the first page, why "does he not set him before us, the best all-round public school "player of this and many other years, and incomparably the best "bowler?" In that estimate of Crawford all must agree, but, as people eating strawberries and cream often keep the biggest strawberry till near the end, so in this notice of Public School cricket, the best cricketer has until now (and we are nearing the end) not being alluded to except casually to be set aside for future reference.

The REPTON XI. had a very high standard to maintain in view of the record of the previous year, when only one match was lost, and that by only one run. This year two defeats were suffered, but both school matches were again won, though not each by one innings this time, and the Haverford match, spoilt by rain, was drawn in favour of Repton. It was no mean performance to defeat schools like Malvern and Uppingham, and have the best of the game against our American visitors. Young was captain for the second year, and his average receded by 25 per cent; this however is another illustration of the misleading nature of averages. Young scored nearly a hundred runs more than last year (aggregate this year 630), never made a century and had an average of over 45! As he goes to Cambridge, the Cambridge captain is hardly likely to consider him a "decadent" cricketer. He is a wicket-keeper of more than average excellence, as well as a consistent and reliable bat. As regards Greswell, a spell of want of confidence affected him in the middle of the season, but when a player has an average of 30 and a highest score of 67, he must be a persona grata in any team, even though he may have omitted to repeat his century against Malvern. Meyer, who is undoubtedly a good bat, failed to maintain his form of the previous year. Crawford—now we prepare to assimilate our largest strawberry—was throughout the season superb, especially in the two school matches. Against Uppingham he took twelve wickets and against Malvern he secured the unlucky number of thirteen—unlucky indeed for Malvern. Throughout the season, he took seventy-five wickets, just three more than all the other bowlers of the eleven! Though undoubtedly the best public school bowler, with a strong claim to be considered the best amateur bowler of the year, as a bat he was of material assistance, to put it mildly, to his school, his contribution in that department amounting to 759 runs, with an average of 54! As he is staying on at Repton another two years, there is probably trouble in store for Malvern, Uppingham, and other opponents, in the seasons of 1905 and 1906. In the bowling line Halkett and Greswell helped Crawford to take wickets, and Johnson should be included in the category of useful school bowlers. Thwaites was serviceable in all departments, while the fielding of the side can be described as fair, though not brilliant, excepting of course the invincible Crawford.

To conclude with a reference to schools, whose information has but lately reached me, TONBRIDGE had a young team and a very good young bowler of fifteen, B. W. Pigg, whose development will be awaited with interest. The conquerors of Dulwich, the eleven succumbed to Haverford, the batting being at fault. Sadler, the captain, at times set his team a good example in batting, while Colley, Wright, Bryan-Brown, and Killick, when they made runs, made them well. Wright also assisted in the attack and should be useful next year. Houlder proved above the average as a wicket-keeper, and the ground fielding of the side was excellent, while Bryan-Brown surpassed his colleagues in the matter of brilliant catches, which he secured at point.

It is late in the day to ask any reader to accompany me across the Border, but I would ask the readers of Wisden to make an excursion,—on paper only—to Glenalmond, where they will find a team that defeated Watsons College and Blair Lodge, succumbed to Fettes, Loretto (after a close finish) and Merchiston, and had much the best of a drawn game against Edinburgh Academy. Scores rule low on Scotch wickets, but Fraser and McKellop by 28 and 27 wickets, for seven and nine runs apiece respectively, showed their ability to dispose of opponents cheaply. As Cunningham got rid of 35 opponents for ten runs each, his assistance on a Scotch wicket is not to be despised. The bowling is justly described as quantity, and when seven members of the team each take eight wickets or more for averages, varying from four runs to 13, there cannot be much hope of improving one's average against Glenalmond, even though the bowlers were all medium pace. Malcolm heads the batting averages and being a good field, seems the best all-round man. Ogilvy, McKillop and Jenkinson made runs under difficulties, while in addition to Malcolm and Jenkinson, already mentioned, Easton deserves credit for his fielding, and Wilson for his wicket-keeping.

No further information comes from my native heath, though cricket is played in other Scottish schools than Glenalmond; likewise it is played at Shrewsbury, though this year the match between Shrewsbury and Rossall had to be cancelled. Belated information however reaches me, that Humphreys the captain was a good fast bowler who may be heard of at Cambridge, and T. P. G. Forman a brilliant bat, while Horlick was brilliant in the field. Will my readers excuse me from attempting to make bricks, when the supply of straw, as in the case of the Israelites in Egypt, is inadequate? and allow me to conclude my article with a few remarks on the chief Public School cricketers of the season, and pass by in respectful silence the numerous other schools, for whom space is not available, or from whom information is lacking? There is one school, however, whose doings have been very much before the public throughout one season, and I have been asked to make reference to our American friends, the Haverford XI. They proved worthy opponents, and only acknowledged defeat on two occasions, at Malvern and at Eton, though the conquerors of these two schools, Repton and Winchester had the best of the drawn games with the Americans, Winchester achieving a moral victory. We may regard them as more than equal to all save our best Public Schools, and in this category I would place, Winchester, Repton, Eton, Malvern, and Uppingham (whom our visitors did not play). In fielding they have nothing to learn, and to many schools have much to teach. Also in playing an uphill game, they exhibit a wonderful graft from the good old tree known as British pluck—witness Chris. Morris's determined play against Winchester, the two Morris's coming from the stock of which batsmen are made. The bowling was varied, but perhaps in that department there is room for improvement, which doubtless will be manifest when next they visit us, and may that be soon.

As an all-round cricketer, Crawford stands out in a class by himself, being alpha plus in all departments, and will doubtless continue to do so while he remains at Repton; other fine all-round players seem to be Heyman, Evans, Mugliston, Belcher, Buchanan and Rattigan. Among batsmen, Foster and Day, Wright and Bruce, Hunt and Palmer, Salter, Boles, Scott, Young, Tebbutt, Hooman, Bignall, and Brisley have shown remarkable form for their various schools. Comparison between them is impossible owing to the varying nature of wickets, and the varying strength of opposing teams, but it is not unreasonable to suppose that some, though not all, will make their mark in first-class and University cricket. With Crawford facile princeps as a bowler, Heyman (who has also been referred to) and Younger, Jesson, Methuen, Humphreys (of Shrewsbury), Blencowe, Hatfield (on his best form of 1903) and young Pigg (who should train on) seem the most successful and promising. The wicket-keepers May, Young, Huyshe, Mathieson, Finlay, and Houlder seem in a class superior to the others, and it is possible there may be a "Blue" awaiting one of them. Let not the important department of fielding, and those who have shown excellence in that respect be omitted. Haverford set a notable example to all our schools, but some of them would be no mean rivals to our American visitors. Eton, Sherbone and Rossall, Uppingham and Tonbridge were fine fielding teams, and individually, Campbell, Severne, Wakelin, Peltzer, Champion, Fowle, Bond, Chiazzari, Cornelius, de la Cour, and Bryan-Brown deserve recognition for their excellence in this department of the game, so sadly alas! neglected by so many of our school elevens, and county ones also.

In conclusion, though I do not propose to classify schools that do not play one another, I may be taken to task for my assertion, early in this article, that Winchester is entitled to the first place among our schools. Many may urge that Repton, by defeating two remarkably strong schools in Malvern and Uppingham, having the best of the draw against Haverford, and possessing the finest bowler that has appeared for many years, is entitled to that position. The question can never be decided, and each person is entitled to his individual opinion. Mine, which is merely that of an individual, and for which I do not ask the Editor of Wisden to assume responsibility, is based on the following considerations: Repton twice met with defeat, Winchester did not: Winchester defeated one very strong side in Eton, and had a moral victory against Haverford. Winchester had a team of all round excellence that did not depend on one or more stars; and moreover, met opponents, in club matches, of greater strength than Repton usually did, and yet were never defeated. Let them have the honour due to an unbeaten side.

Let me also bid fairwell to my readers, with the hope that they will credit me with an endeavour to criticise justly from a vast mass of, sometimes conflicting, details, and will overlook errors, which are those of judgment and not of intention. To those who have so kindly supplied me with information, some of them old friends, and some of them previously unknown to me, I would tender my hearty and sincere thanks for their assistance, without which the materials for this article could not have been collected.

ETON v. HARROW.

Played at Lord's, Friday, Saturday, July 8, 9.—For the second year in succession Eton beat Harrow in a single innings, but they had to work much harder and longer for their victory than in 1903, little more than half-an-hour remaining for play when on the Saturday evening the end was reached. Eton won by an innings and twelve runs, as against an innings and 154 in the previous year, but their superiority was almost as marked as before, the difference being that Harrow made a much better struggle to avoid defeat. The two matches were curiously similar in character, Harrow in each case losing practically all chance of victory through a doleful failure in batting after winning the toss. The match under notice will always remain a memorable one, inasmuch as D. C. Boles, of Eton, by scoring 183, beat a record which had stood for 63 years. The highest score previously obtained in the matches between the two schools was 152 for Eton in 1841 by the still-living Emilius Bayley. One heard after the match that though Boles was thought likely, by reason of his straight bat and great advantages of height and reach, to do well in the match, he did not have a reputation such as was enjoyed at Eton in the past by R. A. H. Mitchell, Alfred Lubbock, the late C. J. Ottaway, Alfred Lyttelton, W. F. Forbes, or C. T. Studd. Still, whatever his merits, he played an extraordinarily fine innings. Assuredly no one in a school match has ever shown greater self-control or a more remarkable power of adapting his play to the varying conditions of the game. Up to a certain point, while things were going badly for his side, he was caution itself, being actually at the wickets an hour and three-quarters for his first twenty runs. No one—unfamiliar with his style—watching him during that time, could have suspected the tremendous hitting-power he afterwards displayed. Gradually, as Eton got the best of the match, he began to let himself go, and after reaching his hundred he made his third fifty in thirty-five minutes, driving in wonderful form. An innings marked by stronger contrasts has perhaps never been seen at Lord's. Just at the end he scored 35 runs from two consecutive overs, and, after taking two hours and forty minutes to make 50 runs, he added 133 in an hour and three-quarters. His hits included twenty-seven 4's, seven 3's, and ten 2's. Naturally his innings dwarfed everything else in the match, though there were other features of interest, the Eton fielding, which was put to a severe test on the second afternoon, reaching an exceptionally high standard. In this connection a special word of praise must be given to Campbell, the Eton captain, who did great things at cover-point.

Harrow, on winning the toss, lost three wickets in half-an-hour for 16 runs, but, so long as Bailey stayed with Bolton, there seemed a chance of these early disasters being retrieved. After Bailey left at 62, however, the batting collapsed in a lamentable way, and the innings was all over for 109. Bolton played in capital form for over two hours, and was the last man out. When, soon after the luncheon interval, Eton had three wickets down for 40, there still seemed some likelihood of an even game, but Boles and Todd took the score to 183, and at the drawing of stumps Eton had secured an overwhelming advantage, the total standing at 375 for six wickets. Though in the end over-shadowed by Boles, Todd played brilliant cricket for his 84, hitting a dozen 4's. Boles, it should be mentioned, gave a very difficult chance of being caught and bowled when he had made 18. Bailey, while keeping wicket, received a severe blow over the right eye, the flesh being cut clean through to the bone, and could take no further part in the day's cricket.

On the Saturday the game resolved itself into a long struggle on the part of Harrow to avoid defeat. They went in at a quarter to twelve with a balance of 297 against them, and it was not until five minutes to seven that the last wicket went down, the total reaching 285. It had been arranged to play on, if necessary, till half-past seven, so that Eton won with thirty-five minutes to spare. Bailey, though naturally feeling the effects of his accident, played a great game for two hours and fifty minutes, going in first and being the fifth man out. When, before four o'clock, the sixth wicket fell at 145, the end seemed near, but Crake and Brandt played with the utmost resolution, and added 101 runs for the seventh wicket. At the fall of the ninth wicket an hour and a quarter remained for play, but Harrow died very hard, Morris and Humphreys staying together for forty minutes before a palpable case of leg-before-wicket finished the match. Eton bore their long outing uncommonly well, never for a moment becoming slack. Horlick, a very slow left-handed bowler, sent down fifty overs, keeping his length with the steadiness of a professional, and proving himself master of many devices. It would be difficult to say how many runs were saved by smart fielding during Harrow's long innings, any number of hard hits being stopped. The old choices in the elevens were Campbell, Boles, Tod, and Hatfield for Eton, and Bailly, Bolton, Crake, and Forster for Harrow. C. S. Rattigan was prevented from playing for Harrow by the tragic death, a few days before, of his father, and illness kept C. E. Lucas out of the team. Hatfield bowled well, but did not approach his success of the previous year. Early in the season he lost several weeks' practice through an injury to his knee.

	1904. Eton won by an innings and 12 runs.

Seventy-nine matches have been played, of which Eton have won thirty. Harrow thirty-three, and sixteen have been drawn. This is the generally published record, but Harrow men object very strongly to the game in 1805 being treated as a regular contest between the two schools, contending that it is no more correct to count that than the fixture in 1857, for boys under twenty, which has been rejected.

Fifteen three-figure innings have now been played in matches between the schools, as follows :—

183 D. C. Boles (in 1904), Eton.	113 W. F. Forbes (in 1876), Eton.
152 E. Bayley (in 1841), Eton.	112* A. W. T. Daniel (in 1860), Harrow.
142 T. G. O. Cole (in 1897), Harrow.	108 C. J. Ottaway (in 1869), Eton.
135 A. K. Watson (in 1885), Harrow.	108 R. B. Hoare (in 1888), Harrow.
124 J. H. Stogden (in 1895), Harrow.	101 H. C. Pilkington (in 1896), Eton.
120 B. J. T. Bosanquet (in 1896), Eton.	100 E. Crawley (in 1885), Harrow.
117 A. W. Ridley (in 1871), Eton.	100 E. N. S. Crankshaw (in 1903), Eton.
114 C. P. Foley (in 1886), Eton.

In making his 183 Boles set up a new record for the match, beating the 152 obtained in 1841 by Emilius Bayley, now the Rev. Sir John Robert Laurie.

RUGBY v. MARLBOROUGH.

Played at Lord's, Wednesday, Thursday, July 27, 28.—Scott, the Marlborough captain, gained a great personal triumph at the outset, and his fine display was the main factor in his side's easy victory. Aided first by Butterworth, with whom 153 were scored in an hour and three-quarters, and later by Ireland who assisted in making 140 for the third partnership. Scott was fifth out at 328, having batted brightly for four hours. Afterwards Rugby, with the worst of the pitch, lost four wickets in scoring 127. On the second day, Burton and Sloman batted admirably for Rugby, but to no purpose, and Marlborough won by nine wickets.

CHELTENHAM v. HAILEYBURY.

Played at Lord's, Friday, Saturday, July 29, 30.—Haileybury had much the best of the luck throughout, for the rain, which stopped play on Friday soon after five o'clock, ruined the pitch for Cheltenham on the second day. It is only fair to say, however, that while the ground remained fast Cheltenham were always at a disadvantage, and had five wickets down for 54 at the close of the first stage. On the Saturday their ill-luck pursued them, and on following on all hope of averting defeat was lost when four wickets fell for four runs. Haileybury won by an innings and 41 runs.

ETON v. WINCHESTER.

Played at WINCHESTER, Friday, Saturday, June 24, 25.—Showing excellent form at every point, Winchester gained a brilliant and most decisive victory by eight wickets. The cricket on the first day suggested a close match, Eton making 235 and Winchester 176 for the loss of six wickets, but on Saturday, Winchester, after getting a lead of 12 runs on the first innings, quite outplayed their opponents. Bowling and fielding well they dismissed Eton a second time for 141, and then in ninety minutes hit off the 130 runs required to win the match. On Friday, Campbell, the Eton captain, showed excellent form, but in the second innings, Astor was the only batsman to play well; seeing that he made 81 out of a total of 141, the character of his display will be readily gathered. Towards the close of the match Wright and Gordon punished some loose bowling severely, and after the winning hit was made there was a scene of great enthusiasm.
