

PUBLIC SCHOOL CRICKET IN 1922

By H. S. ALTHAM.

The season of 1922 presented a somewhat severe trial to the average school cricketer. For six weeks he enjoyed just such a succession of beautiful days and fast true wickets, as he had come to regard almost as a matter of course in 1921. Quite suddenly, in mid-June, the weather broke, and thereafter never recovered: several results inevitably followed. The first was that a large number of the more important inter-school fixtures, played between the middle of June and the end of July, were ruined by the weather and left perforce unfinished—a calamity disappointing in the extreme to the elevens and their supporters, and irritating to the cricket historian who thus sees the most obvious grounds for comparative judgments cut from under his feet. In the second place, in much of the cricket which the weather permitted the conditions were just those least calculated to bring out the true form of the school player. A sodden wicket and a greasy ball often reduced good bowlers to comparative impotence: a ball that jumped up abruptly in the first over would send back a crack batsman before he had the chance of showing what he could do: in fielding and catching even school sides suffered to some extent from lack of the sunshine which makes supple the muscles and quickens the eye.

I hope that I am not giving the impression that I should like to see all school cricket played solely on fast true wickets: far from it, for I shall always believe that the ideal match, school or otherwise, is that in which none of the four totals exceed 180 runs, provided, of course, that the limitation is imposed by the bowlers' skill and not the batsmen's deficiencies. But I am convinced that the best conditions for teaching the game are provided by a fine season, varied by occasional downpours: two or three nets and a match on turning wickets will serve to rub into the young batsman the vital importance of watching the ball and of footwork: they will encourage the bowler and emphasise for him the value of length and spin as opposed to the over-fashionable cult of the swerve.

An average English May provides just the conditions I have in mind, and the school cricketer faces the more serious trials of June with a sound grasp of the essentials: a spell of fast wickets will then put the coping stone of confidence upon foundations well and truly laid. To a considerable extent last season reversed the process : almost from the start the batsman found everything consistently in his favour, the bowler everything against him, with the result in many cases that the former learnt attack without defence, while the latter regarded time and the pitch as enemies rather than allies, and relied for success on "doing a bit in the air," or, worse still, on some fantastic placing of the field. Then came the deluge and both were at sea and anchorless : relatively, of course, the bowler was the better off, but absolutely he was often as incapable of taking full advantage of his chances as was the batsman of holding his own in the now unfavourable conditions. And here, let me state my conviction, supported, I believe, by the great bulk of expert opinion, that length bowling and good fielding have won and will win more school matches than all the crack batsmen of history : the most brilliant batsman may fail completely—did not Victor Trumper once make but 14 runs in five consecutive Test match innings ? he may be just off-colour, or a ball may jump or keep low just once in the long day, and 'ibi omnis effusus labor,' but if the bowler will only keep his length, and his fielders will only catch, it is more certain than anything else in cricket that sooner or later in the match they will reap their reward.

If this is true, it is all the more curious that one should hear so little in these days of any systematic attempt to teach bowling at school : it was not always so, for we read that when William Lillywhite came to Winchester in 1851 as first professional to the Wykehamists, he set himself at once to train up bowlers and a wicket-keeper, with the result that Winchester after a longish spell of defeat promptly beat both their rivals in the week at Lord's. I know of one case in recent years when a young bowler was taken in hand at the beginning of a season and made to practise regularly at a mark on the ground : before the season was half way through he could bowl a length in matches and came out with much the best record on his list. But such enterprise is the exception rather than the rule : David Harris of Hambledon used to bowl for hours by himself in the winter, but how many school cricketers ever bowl a ball except between April and September.

While I am speaking of length bowling, may I touch on another point that is linked with it ? I mean the placing of the field. On the whole I think it is an exception to find a school captain who has learnt—or, may I say, been taught—his job in this respect : often one sees the field arranged without any reference to the pace of the wicket, often the initial arrangement left undisturbed irrespective of the course of the game, or often again, I am sorry to say, one is aware of that damnable heresy in the management of a field—'chasing the ball.' But for much of this confusion the blame must be partly on the bowler : it is impossible to place the field for erratic bowling : it is utterly demoralising to a side to watch its slips carefully stationed to catch the edged swinger, and then see the bowler serve up three long hops to leg : worse still, when third slip is then removed to guard the leg boundary and the next ball edged to where he should still have been. Of such troubles there is only one real cure—for the bowlers to learn to bowl a length, and only when they can do so, can the best use be made of the fielders. As an object lesson I could not ask for a better example than this year's Yorkshire Eleven.

Let us now turn more closely to the task in front of us and see what general judgments are suggested by the school cricket of 1922. There seems no reasonable doubt that one or two schools did produce first-class sides : I am tempted to plump unequivocally for Harrow as the best of them all, partly on the strength of what I saw myself in their game with Winchester, but primarily because of their really remarkable form in their trial matches against a more searching test than any other school had last year to face. With them in Class One I should place Malvern, Marlborough, and possibly Repton, though I am a little unhappy about the latter's attack : but I should dearly have liked to watch two semi-finals fought out between these four schools, and had the final tie found Harrow and Malvern in opposition on a fast wicket, we could, I think, have settled down to enjoy a real feast of confident and aggressive batting of the sort to which one was more or less accustomed in the first years of the century, but of which all too little has been seen of late. Just below Class One I would rate Cheltenham, Eton, Westminster, and perhaps Haileybury and Clifton. There was probably very little to choose between Cheltenham, Clifton, and Haileybury, but in-as-much as Cheltenham defeated Clifton, held their own with Haileybury, but had to accept defeat from the all-conquering Marlburians, it is perhaps legitimate to rate them just below the select band who never struck their colours in an inter-school match. It is true that on this score Westminster may feel themselves aggrieved at not being included in Class 1, but they were so much of a 'two-men' side that I cannot rate them quite on a level with the 'Big Four,' whose strength was very much collective. The same is true of Haileybury with whom Hudson was positively an 'Atlas.' Eton were, and will probably remain, an enigma : they made runs so slowly that most of their trial matches quite failed to test the capacity of the side as a whole : they were all at sea on their first day of mud at Winchester, but held their own under similar conditions against the redoubtable Harrovians. Personally I feel sure that there was much sound batting in the side and that, given two full days' cricket on a fast wicket, they would have taken a good deal of beating by any side in Class 1, but I doubt whether they would have scored fast enough or been strong enough in attack to force a win themselves. In fielding they need not fear comparison with any side, though Repton and Marlborough were also excellent in this department. O si sic omnes! But I am sorry to say that in several cases reports have reached me of the fielding being very far below that standard which we have the right to expect from a public school eleven. For this there can really be no justification: a good deal certainly depends upon a thorough and intelligent system of coaching, but most of the onus must be with the school captain, whose enthusiasm and personal example must set the standard for his side. The moral effect of really good fielding on bowlers and opposing batsmen alike is incalculable, and conversely the influence of a single slack fieldman or of one or two who are slovenly or unsound in their method is proportionately demoralising.

Turning now to the individual cricketers to whom last season brought renown, one need look no further than the compliment paid to public school cricket by the counties in August, when room was found for no fewer than ten of them in the county elevens at a time when, generally speaking, those elevens are at their greatest strength. Dawson (Harrow) and Taylor (Westminster) played for Leicestershire; Winter (Repton) and Jagger (Malvern) for Somerset; Guise (Winchester) for Middlesex; L. G. Crawley (Harrow) for Worcestershire; Bagnall (Harrow) for Northants.; Pugh (Rugby) and Hampton (Clifton) for Warwickshire; and King-Turner (Cheltenham) for Gloucestershire. Moreover, even this list would no doubt have been augmented had circumstances so admitted, for Hudson of Haileybury, would surely have won a trial from any county side, while Holmes of Malvern, Lowe of Westminster, C. S. Crawley of Harrow, and Sherwell, the wicket-keeping batsman of Tonbridge, might not have been outclassed in similar company.

It is perhaps a little significant that the cricketers thus honoured were, with the exception of Winter, selected almost exclusively for their batting, but it is to be remembered that the weather had by that time taken a change and in most counties the stock professional bowlers were doing more or less all that was required of them. Nevertheless, I think this was symptomatic of the year's school cricket: there were many good batsmen, some, I believe, of exceptional promise, but there were very few good bowlers, certainly none comparable for a moment with such school giants as A. G. Steel, C. L. Townsend, F. S. Jackson, E. M. Dowson, or J. N. Crawford.

The collective performance of the schools' representatives in county cricket is not impressive: Bagnall did well for Northants. and his century against Sussex was a splendid achievement: Crawley in his two matches for Worcestershire impressed all who saw him by the strength and freedom of his driving: Guise did more than his share in the massacre of the Warwickshire bowling at Edgbaston, and defended very skilfully against Essex and Surrey: on the other hand some of the boys, I am afraid, had a rather discouraging experience. But, with a succession of difficult wickets such as August produced, they were tried very high: if the weather is fine, the step from the best school cricket to a county match is, for a batsman, not so very long, but when the ball is turning, it is a very different story: then only luck or genius can adequately compensate for inexperience. There is no need then to attach too much importance to the modest figures of last August's showing: the school champions of 1922 may yet do all that their friends hope of them. But all is not always plain-sailing for the freshman, however great his reputation: the 'Varsity season is very short, he may be out of luck or form in May, and once tried and dropped he may find it hard to win back again. But there is another trouble: at school he has been accustomed to regular net-practice and regular coaching: he had only to develop a fault—how suddenly and mysteriously they develop—to have it tackled by some watchful mentor: at the 'Varsity things are different, the fault may take root and become a habit, may prove his undoing in a vital match, and the Blue recedes another year. And now I must walk delicately, but, unless I am grievously misinformed, there seems to be a tendency at Oxford to abandon systematic net-practice in the Parks in favour of the less arduous atmosphere of college grounds. If this is so, I cannot help feeling that it must react unfavourably upon the 'Varsity eleven: what is vital in school cricket cannot possibly be superfluous in the next grade; first-class net wickets on the University ground are essential, and it is not the least of a captain's duties to superintend with the help, of course, of the best professionals he can obtain, the batting, bowling, and fielding practice of his potential eleven. The members of an eleven, such as Yorkshire, are always learning, profiting by the collective brains and experience of their fellows, and the same should be possible, as it is surely desirable, for the University freshmen.

One more general reflection and this preamble, already outrageously long, shall be wound up. This too, I feel some diffidence in broaching, for I know that some of my friends, with far wider knowledge of school cricket than my own, do not agree with me. Nevertheless, as the Latin Prose books have it, "I cannot but be persuaded" that really strong sides will always be the exception at any school where the elderly and robust but moderate player is preferred, as a matter of principal, in the selection of the side, to the youngster of real promise. The arguments of the opposition generally take one or all of the following forms:—(1) That the young player, though a giant among his fellows, will be outclassed in 'men's cricket,' and will be absolutely of less value to his side than his older, stronger, but perhaps less gifted, fellow; (2) That the policy will cramp his style and sap his confidence at the most critical period of his cricket development; (3) That it will give him a swelled head. With the last argument I have frankly no patience: if it is true, then there is something frankly rotten in the state of Denmark: nor do I believe that the majority of distinguished amateur cricketers were as boys, or are as men, particularly obnoxious people. As regards the second I can only say that it is historically indisputable that the vast majority of cricketers who really made history at school or the University did get into their school side very young, and did not suffer any such ill effect in consequence. The first is by far the weightiest argument, but I fear I am still unconvinced: admittedly the young batsman will be facing bowling that is better and often faster than that to which he is accustomed, but in most cases the wicket will be a good deal better, which will largely discount this difference: again, he is likely to score slowly, much more slowly than the type of batsman whom, in the argument, he supplants, but surely it is a truism that, if only a batsman can stay at the wicket, runs are bound to come, and it is my contention that youth and a sound batting method will actually bring in more runs in a season than age and muscle with some shots but no real defence. After all in most school cricket chances of scoring are reasonably frequent and the leg ball and the full pitch or long hop on the off can be dealt with as faithfully by the boy of sixteen as by his lustier senior. As for defence against proper bowling, I would rather any day have nine stone and the power to move the feet and play back and forward straight, than twelve stone, a lion heart, and a crooked bat. Surely, too, it is right to look ahead and bear in mind the value of experience and the prospects of next season and even the season after that. Cricket development is a queer business, I know, and mistakes may come hard on the side and the individual, but the promise of a really sound batting method at sixteen is not so often belied, and when it is, I should not seldom be disposed to fasten the responsibility on a system which, at the critical stage, arrests rather than accelerates the young cricketer's development.

No doubt there is much to be said on the opposite side, but I believe that a scrutiny of past Annuals will show something in my support, and, if I must particularise I would suggest that the last two years cricket at Harrow and Malvern may well repay consideration.

And now for just a glance at one or two of the big school matches, and the two representative games at Lord's: that done, we will pass on to review the school elevens, nominatim et seriatim.

In the eyes of every Harrovian the rain that ruined all chance of cricket on July 14 will no doubt be regarded as the most calamitous event of the year: there could never have been any serious prospect of a result in a single day's play, and what there was was effectively killed by Dawson and Lord Dunglass before lunch. Both were a trifle lucky, but it was no mean performance to put up 100 runs for the second wicket on so dead a ground and against the two formidable Harrow bowlers when fresh to their work. The rest of the Eton batting was uneventful, but held the fort long enough to give Cox the moral satisfaction of being able to declare. Harrow started rather disastrously to Bridgeman, always a dangerous bowler at the beginning of an innings, but L. G. Crawley played a typically confident and attractive innings, and his partnership with his cousin, C. S., was easily the best bit of cricket in the match. Undaunted by a shower of rain just after six o'clock, the Eton attack reasserted itself, their captain got three wickets cheaply, and amid a certain commendable, if rather pathetic, enthusiasm, Eton just got home with a lead of six runs.

The Winchester match was also ruined by rain on the first morning: Eton batted really very badly on a dead wicket, and Winchester, thanks to a heroic and most skilful innings by their crippled captain, startled their supporters by actually securing a lead of two. For a time next morning things were really interesting: Eton lost five wickets too cheaply to be pleasant, but then Thursby and Incedon-Webber, aided by some luck and faulty catching, put on 133 runs and made their side safe from any chance of defeat. Winchester were left with 263 runs to get in three hours playing time, and had nothing but a draw to hope for: they experienced a very anxious half-hour at the close of the match, but the stubborn defence of Smith, Guise and Barker just pulled them through. Earlier in the year they had been outclassed and heavily defeated by Harrow at Harrow, and the latter had won a most sensational victory over Charterhouse at Godalming.

Of the other school fixtures played at Lord's, the Cheltenham and Haileybury match provided most interest. Thanks to Hudson's splendid batting, which exhausted the critics of their superlatives, and to the bowling of Withers in the first innings, Haileybury had at 4.15 p.m. been able to declare with six wickets down, leaving Cheltenham two and a half hours in which to get 225 runs. For a long time the game was most uneventful, neither side seeming to anticipate much chance of a result, but at 6.15 p.m. Lumsden and Duleep Sinhji suddenly conceived the idea that the runs were to be got and went for them: the ball soared into the air in every direction, except to hand, and when time arrived Cheltenham were actually within five runs of their task. One of the features of the match was the Cheltonians, admirable fielding.

Marlborough were much too strong for Rugby, and Clifton for Tonbridge.

Once again in the two representative matches at the beginning of August did rain virtually ruin what should have been most interesting cricket. Lord's Schools v. The Rest was limited to its first day, but that day was decidedly eventful: the wicket was never really difficult, but thirty-three wickets of two very strong batting sides fell for no more than 244 runs. Quite rightly in a match of this kind and with so much talent at his command Guise was not content to leave well alone, but gave all his bowlers a chance: the result was some varied but uniformly steady bowling and, with everything going wrong for the batsmen, the Lord's Schools barely topped the century. The Rest opened most disastrously, and in spite of a really good innings by the Malvernian, Legge, and some invaluable defence by Bovell-Jones of Bedford, nine wickets were down for 84: then the Repton captain, Winter, showed how far his figures for the year belie his true form as a batsman, and wrested for his side a lead of 13. Even then sensations were not over for the day, for Jackson, Hudson, and Bagnall were all dismissed without scoring before the close. The out-cricketer of both sides was good, and Hudson, Philps, and Duleep Sinhi caught splendid catches, but the batsmen, as a whole, failed to reproduce anything approaching the form of which they were capable.

The first day of the match against the Army will probably never be forgotten by any member of the Combined Schools eleven: after Tuesday's deluge the ground was already sodden, a periodical drizzle kept the ball greasy for both bowlers and fieldsmen, the weather was dull and dispiriting, and, worst of all, a side of reputedly excellent fielders struck one of those days when nothing would go right: catch after catch, difficult, ordinary, and positively easy, was thrown on the floor and before they left the field the Schools must long have been praying for it to open and swallow them up. The Army, playing with that combination of efficiency and genial brutality which one associates with their batting, made the most of their chances. Captains Wilkinson and Williams opened with the comfortable little partnership of 164, and, though three wickets then fell cheaply, the subsequent batsmen hit away merrily: one honourable and gallant gentleman was missed four times before he had made 6! Next morning the soldiers very properly declared: on a wicket which was never really difficult, though the ball would take spin, the Schools did very moderately to be dismissed for 153, though Crawley, Pugh, and Taylor all played well, in their different styles. When, however, their second innings opened, it was obvious that at last the batting tragedy of the week was over: the heavy roller had eased the wicket, and Guise and Hudson at once set about the bowling in a style commensurate with their reputations Taylor, who followed, played even better and his resource in defence and free, confident driving made a very considerable impression. Finally, L. G. Crawley played one of his very best innings, to the danger of mid-off and the satisfaction of those critics who had all along maintained that his batting was something quite out of the ordinary.

And now at long last let us sound the 'fall-in' and pass on to review the ranks.

The Eton Eleven came out with a record that is, on paper at least, anything but distinguished, ten drawn games and a defeat to be settled against a single victory. Even when due weight is given to the general strength of the visiting sides, such figures must suggest, if not any marked weakness, at least a singular inability to seize and hammer home an advantage. Now this has been perhaps the most salient feature in many Eton sides in the past and it may as well be admitted at once that the Eleven of 1922 were anything but typical of what the world understands by Eton cricket. In their batting one saw little of that confident, aggressive forward-play and off-driving which, since R. A. H. Mitchell returned to Eton as a master nearly sixty years ago, has stamped so many batsmen with the trade-mark of Upper Club and Agar's Plough. It is not too much to say that for the most part this year's Eton batsmen were unattractive to watch; even when they had been at the wicket some time, they seemed unable to pass from defence to attack. Few of them would, or could, meet the bowler and drive him in front of the wicket and they were, collectively, extremely uncertain performers against the type of really slow bowler to which many previous elevens have given such singularly short shift.

This relative lack of enterprise on the part of most of the early batsmen made it almost impossible for the side to force a win in a one-day match on an ordinary wicket; what was, perhaps, even more troublesome, it prevented the later batsmen from getting an adequate amount of match practice.

But now having said thus much in criticism of the Eton batting, let us hasten to add that there is much to be said on the other side. On a fast true wicket, they were a difficult side to dismiss and, in many of their fixtures, showed themselves capable of dealing successfully with good club bowling. Dawson and Hurley were an excellent opening pair who watched the ball carefully and very seldom gave themselves away; they were particularly good in dealing with the new ball.

Arkwright and Llewellyn-Davies were also players of considerable ability. The latter played excellently for his runs at Winchester, and I fancy his chances of developing into a player above the average. Arkwright's innings of 22 on the dead wicket against Harrow impressed the critics. Of the rest, Kennerly-Rumford, Cox, Incedon Webber and Thursby, were all quite likely to make 50 under straightforward conditions. The latter was admittedly lucky in his second innings against Winchester, but his defence at rather a critical time definitely turned the tide, and as he is quite young a good deal more may be heard of him.

Had the fine weather of the opening six weeks continued throughout the season, a good deal less criticism would probably have been heard of the eleven, but there is no doubt that on wet wickets, the strength of the side was most markedly reduced. It is true that their first innings against Winchester provided positively their first experience of such conditions and that subsequently they were unable to get enough practice at the turning ball, but the defects to which I have referred above must in any case have told against them. Lord Dunglass and Lewellyn-Davies were dangerous batsmen on slow wickets; the former indeed was probably 50%, a better player on them than on a fast one, for he had the courage of his convictions and could hook and pull the turning ball effectively, as he proved in both of the school matches. But with these exceptions, the Eton batting on a wet wicket was liable to be reduced to something very like a passive resistance by two bowlers who could really keep a length.

Curiously enough, the break in the weather was equally unfortunate for the Eton attack. Bridgeman was the one dangerous bowler in the side, and on a fast wicket with a new ball was liable to shoot out two or three batsmen very quickly; but, as soon as the ball mudded up, half the danger was gone and he was then often inclined to bowl short to the satisfaction of any batsman who could hook. Lord Dunglass was not really discovered as a bowler until well on in the season, but on a wet wicket he was probably the most useful of the Etonians; he could keep a length and seemed often able to force some life out of an apparently dead pitch. In both the school matches he did sound work.

The rest of the attack was very ordinary, though Cox, when he could find his length, got wickets cheaply. In a sense, perhaps, Eton suffered from an embarras de richesses: there were so many possible change bowlers that all except Bridgeman and Cox were short of match practice.

And now, coming to the Eton fielding, we may have done with criticism and say at once that it was quite first-rate. Almost without exception, the side were quick in anticipation, chased the ball well, and threw in fast and low. If there was a weakness it lay, perhaps, in the slip catching, but on the off-side Dawson and Kennerly-Rumford were quite first-rate, whilst Lewellyn-Davies was an excellent and, at times, brilliant wicket-keeper. Eton's prospects next year are bright. Bridgeman will captain the side and will have six of last year's team to support him.

It may be that the Harrow Eleven of 1922 will, within a generation be lost in the limbo of forgotten sides. Fate decreed that it should not be their's to beat Eton and a victory at Lord's is only too often the only sure pass-port to a niche in history. Nevertheless, I am convinced—and I believe the opinion to be shared by most cricketers who saw them play—that they were a side far above the average, worthy, perhaps, to be rated with any Harrow Eleven since the middle eighties. It is true that in attack they had to rely almost exclusively on a single pair of bowlers, and before the end of the year there were signs at least of the strain beginning to tell; but Enthoven and Anderson were responsible for so many fine performances through the season that, given two full days of cricket in the great match at Lord's, they might in the end have played a decisive part. Time after time one or other of them got five or six wickets for relatively small cost against exceptionally strong batting sides—for nowhere are opponents consistently more formidable than on the Harrow ground. Of the two, I cannot help feeling that Anderson, at his best, was slightly the more dangerous to a good batsman; his run and action are beautifully free and, unlike so many bowlers of his type, he has the inestimable gift of bowling his late leg swinger so as to hit the wicket and not miss it; what is more, unlike most swingers, he almost invariably kept a length. Enthoven was, except in pace—they both bowl a lively medium—an excellent contrast; his stock ball is the in-swinging and here again he often hits the wicket and has not got to rely on his leg-traps. His physique is splendid and he has the stamina and courage to carry him through the longest day. The Harrow change bowling was unfortunately quite inconsiderable, though Lloyd, at the end of the year, showed glimpses of form; but the fact remains that their two great bowlers carried the side triumphantly on their shoulders through almost all its trials.

The Harrow fielding showed more life and enterprise than has been the case in some past years but, with a few exceptions, it was not more than fair and there seems to have been some room for improvement in its disposition. The catching was for the most part sound but suffered somewhat of a lapse in the one-day's play at Lord's.

Whatever reservations one may be tempted to make as regards the attack, none are necessary or indeed possible as to the batting. Not since the days when twenty years ago I was lucky enough to watch some exceptionally strong Repton and Malvern sides doing battle together have I seen a school eleven whose batting in confidence, method and execution impressed me more. Of them all L. G. Crawley was certainly the most dangerous and may go the furthest; everyone who saw him get runs was impressed by the maturity of his play; he batted like a man rather than a school boy, and better and stronger driving than his, especially on the off-side, has not often been seen for a generation at least in school cricket. He did not play against Winchester as he was then facing the Cambridge examiners, but he hit magnificently for a century against Charterhouse and his driving against Eton in July and against the Army in August was altogether remarkable.

His cousin, C. S. Crawley, was also an exceptional school player, not quite so powerful nor so confident, but the possessor of a beautiful method on the model of thirty years ago, and of great length and fluency of stroke: he was at his best against both Winchester and Eton.

Bagnall was of a slightly different type, but a most sound and effective batsman, with a watchful defence and many strokes. I was told that he was far from being at his best in his innings against Winchester but I have seen few school cricketers who played forward on the off-side more convincingly.

Enthoven had so much work to do with the ball that, to some extent his batting suffered, but he is a watchful, determined player with the invaluable gift of being at his best when his best is most needed. Stewart-Brown, too, was a batsman well above the average and played several splendid innings, especially his 71 not out against a very strong Free Forester side.

To sum up, the Harrow batting was so sound that defeat in a school match on two fine days could be regarded as a remote contingency. Given half such a chance as their two crack bowlers were always capable of winning, and there was a reserve of power in the Harrow driving that would force it home into a decisive victory. In their two school matches other than that against Eton, Harrow annihilated Winchester and snatched a most brilliant victory against Charterhouse and the clock at Godalming. Stewart-Brown is the captain-elect for this year, and will have K. E. Crawley alone of the old choice to help him, but, with the inspiration of last year's great side and the enthusiasm of cricket that is now patent to any observer at Harrow, he may enter on his task confident that the turn of the tide against Eton, so long and sometimes so painfully awaited, should not be long in coming.

The Winchester Eleven of 1921 had an exceptional batsman in Guise, and a very good bowler in T. B. Raikes. Last year the latter had transferred his usefulness to Oxford and no one was found to replace him. Guise again did very well, indeed, on anybody else's standard, remarkably, but he could not alone bear all the weight that was put upon him. Like many another school batsman before him who has been faced with the fact that personal failure may very likely spell collapse for his side, he found the strain telling on him increasingly as the season advanced. Nevertheless, he played many splendid innings; he is not, and I doubt whether he will ever become, a very attractive batsman, but he possesses in a marked degree the solid qualities that go so far to secure success. He watches the ball right on to the bat, plays back and forward very late and, with the bat very close to the master leg, he is extremely strong in all the on-side forcing strokes, and he has that indefinable something which, for the lack of a better word, I am inclined to call "ring-craft."

Most unfortunately for Winchester he was so badly hit on the hand immediately prior to the Eton match that in that game he could do himself nothing approaching justice. Even so, his innings of 44 on the first day stood out head and shoulders above everything else in the game. With the ball also he did very useful work throughout the season; he spins the ball a little, but also presents the rather unusual phenomenon of a slow bowler who can make the ball swing slightly either way; the majority of his wickets, I think, he owed to his ability to make the batsmen treat as a half volley the ball that arrived just short of that length. By nature essentially a change bowler he had unfortunately to keep himself on for long spells at a time and his effectiveness and analyses suffered accordingly.

Apart from their captain, I fear that the Wykehamists' cricket must be written down as mediocre. Smith who went in first with him was an ugly player with few strokes, but he watched the ball and played several really useful innings, notably against the M.C.C.—with Newman and Kennedy to bowl for them—and in the second innings against Eton. Barker could, and did, make some of the beautiful strokes that befit a racquet player, but was sorely lacking in judgment and consistency; nevertheless, at the critical moment against Eton he mastered himself and played an innings that clearly saved the game. The rest of the batting was very unreliable, and if their captain failed Winchester developed the unfortunate habit of being dismissed for somewhere about 100, even on the best wickets.

In bowling, apart from Guise, the brunt of the work fell on Sealey and Stewart; both bowled medium, the former at times a little faster and, with a new ball, both were sometimes dangerous, but Sealey was erratic and Stewart, besides being unlucky with his chances, was inclined to bowl consistently just short of a length. Sinclair, who may yet develop into a good cricketer, met with great success (five for 12) in the first innings against Eton. He spins the ball a lot—often too much—but until he can bowl a length he must be labelled as a “possibility” only. With so moderate an attack, it was all the more unfortunate that for once the Wykehamists fell lamentably short of their traditional standard in fielding; they missed their catches and were slow and uncertain on the ground.

In their school matches they lost to Marlborough and Harrow, and drew with Charterhouse and Eton. The Marlborough match was played under wretched conditions, just after the weather broke; both sides were much at sea on the slow wicket and Winchester lost more by its own bad cricket than by any overwhelming prowess of their opponents; nevertheless, with an eye on Marlborough's record, one cannot hesitate to write them down the better side. The Harrow match was a massacre; there was indeed no comparison between the sides. Of the game at Charterhouse, I shall speak anon and something has already been said of Eton's visit to New Field. G. E. H. Palmer, an attractive wicket-keeper, is this year's captain. Sinclair, Stewart, D. W. Hoare, and McGowan of the old hands will be left.

I only saw the Marlborough side once, on a quite poisonous day in June, immediately after the break in the weather, when they tried conclusions with Winchester in New Field. On that occasion though they won the match just before time and never looked very much like losing it, I am bound to say that they struck me as a workmanlike and versatile rather than a particularly impressive team. Perhaps even at the end of the season a similar verdict would not have been so very wide of the mark, for I doubt whether the side that took the field at Lord's against Rugby contained any cricketer of really outstanding promise, no batsman, I mean, of the class of John Ireland, or bowler to be mentioned in the same breath with poor “Floppy” Napier. But there was a great deal of cricket in the team; there was batting right down to the very tip of the tail, indeed the normal batting order might almost have been inverted without seriously affecting the situation; there were six bowlers of commendable variety and, most of them, of even more commendable length. There was fielding which began by being patchy and ended by being thoroughly good, and there was in Ashfield a captain who knew his job, and did his eleven that greatest of services of welding them into and maintaining them as a team. What is more, his batting was modelled on sound and orthodox lines—a valuable factor in so imitative an environment—and he seemed to like the big occasion best, witness a valuable 40 in the critical second innings at Cheltenham, and the 114 which clearly settled the issue of the Rugby match.

In school matches, Marlborough defeated all four opponents; two of them, Wellington and Rugby, were very weak sides; Winchester were not by any means a strong one, but Cheltenham have fair claim to be rated in the first half-dozen or so. A margin of six wickets in Marlborough's favour at the end of the game was possibly a little generous, but their bowlers had clearly demonstrated their superiority in steadiness and length. Leach was the best of them; he got through a great deal of bowling and could nearly always be relied upon to bowl a real length. Coleridge and Sandford, too, did very good work and Streatfield could bowl a troublesome swinger, while Ashfield, like the good captain he was, could and would take wickets at need with lobs.

The batting averages tell their own tale; top of them is Smith, a useful bowler and No. 10 in the batting order, who time after time refused to get out and held the fort at the crisis while others made runs. Abell, a wicket-keeper distinctly above the average, and Streatfield—a name not unknown to Marlborough cricket—were excellent men to come in No. 7 or so, as they proved against Wellington and Winchester respectively. Dearman never quite fulfilled his promise, but he was a dangerous batsman and Faulkner, though unsound, was attractive on the off-side and played really well in the decisive hour against Cheltenham.

There is no getting away from figures; nine of the side averaged over 15 and six over 25; the tail, if there was one, wagged most adequately whenever it was wanted to, and the failure of an early batsman or two never succeeded in depressing their successors. As the season advanced, the confidence and solidity of the team increased and I believe that at the end of the term they would have taken a lot of beating in a two-day match.

Rugby were a very weak side last year. The prospects at the beginning of the season were reasonably good. There was Pugh to lead the side and give the batting a good send-off and, with ordinary luck, the eleven might well have made a good number of runs. For a time things went reasonably well and though, when Uppingham were met in mid-June, the weakness of the attack was rather forcibly exposed, the batsmen gave a good account of themselves; but from that time onwards everything went wrong; measles became rife and decimated the side. A depleted eleven suffered an innings' defeat at the hands of Clifton and confidence thenceforward seemed steadily to ebb. Comparatively weak opponents proved too strong for a team that never really got together and though a full side eventually reached Lord's for the Marlborough match, the damage was at that time irreparable, and a defeat of ten wickets was probably no travesty of the difference between the schools.

Even accounting for the difference in conditions, Pugh's record bears no comparison with his triumphs of last year. Nevertheless he deserves our sympathy. The knowledge that almost everything depended on his not getting out cramped his style, sapped his confidence, and ended by destroying his faculty for timing the ball; but those who know him best are unshaken in their belief in his ability, and though his record for Warwickshire in August was very modest, it is to be remembered that he made 40 on a mud wicket at the Oval when the early batsmen failed. Apart from Pugh, the best cricketer in the eleven seems to have been Cassels. He is still very young, but his bowling has already improved greatly, and in batting his style is convincing. Longrigg, another young player, showed promise as a left-hand batsman and Perry hit courageously against Marlborough in his own enterprising style. The Rugby fielding, I am afraid, must be written down as uncertain, and often slow. Measles, together with the consequent lack of practice, were probably in the main responsible for this.

Cheltenham had quite a successful season; they drew with Haileybury in the sensational match at Lord's, beat Clifton who had themselves beaten Rugby and Tonbridge, but lost to Marlborough by six wickets on their own ground after a ding-dong game in which the greater steadiness of the Marlborough bowling eventually determined the issue. Their batting was quite strong with six of the side averaging over 20. Jackson, the Captain, was the most consistent, though the break in the weather found him for a time rather ill at ease; he played very well in the first innings at Lord's. King-Turner also comes out with good figures, thanks largely to one great score of 187 not out. He is described as "a good bat but far too impatient," and I fear he must have found when playing for Gloucestershire last August how dearly one can pay for impatience in first-class cricket. Foster was sound and straight; Pacey a determined hitter who was at his best at Lord's, and Duleep Sinhji also did fairly well with the bat, though hardly as well as his last year's form promised.

In bowling, the figures read pretty well; 105 wickets being shared between three of them at an average cost of only just over 16. Unfortunately, however, the attack was not reliable. Harman was the steadiest though, perhaps, somewhat of the type that plays the really good batsman in; Withers was unreliable but Duleep, though like most slow spin bowlers he had his expensive days, did yeoman service and comes out with a really good record.

The ground fielding of the side was at times uncertain, but the catching very sound, and King-Turner was a first-rate fieldsman at cover-point.

Haileybury can at least lay claim to one distinction, the outstanding school batsman of the year. To my great regret, I had no opportunity of seeing Hudson bat, but neither his performances nor the concerted opinion of all who have seen him get runs can leave any doubt whatever about his class. A record of 956 runs with an average of over 68, unassisted by any not-outs, speaks for itself but, in addition to consistency, Hudson evidently possesses the inestimable gift of being absolutely at his best on the big occasion. It is not too much to say that he dominated two out of the three inter-school matches in which he took part. Against Wellington he was content with a modest 52, correctly estimating, no doubt, his team's ability to win by an innings. In the Uppingham match his first innings of 95 did not prevent Haileybury from following on 163 runs in arrears; realising then that he was called upon for something serious, he promptly responded with 191, enabling his team to declare for the loss of seven wickets and thus securing in the end an even draw.

The less favourable batting conditions of the Cheltenham match naturally led to lower scoring, but here again the game revolved round Hudson, whose wonderful double of 90 and 101 constituted more than half the total from the bat of his side's two innings. In style, he is refreshingly old-fashioned, with the left shoulder well forward and plenty of back-lift and follow through. He can punish most severely on the on-side, but his great strength lies in his off-driving in which wrists, timing and perfect balance combine to produce strokes as beautiful as they are effective; he was moreover a quick and safe field on the off-side, and a keen and intelligent captain. He goes to Woolwich and both Universities have cause to lament their loss. Apart from Hudson, there was no outstanding player at Haileybury, but Bonallack came out with excellent bowling figures and, with a new ball, his late swing often had batsmen in trouble. Tiplady, too, was promising; he bowls quite slow right-hand, can turn the ball considerably and keeps a steady length. Meyer did not, perhaps, quite fulfil the promise of last year, but he was very useful both with the bat and ball, and if he can improve his defence he may yet become a batsman above the average. Hamilton often played sound cricket and welcomed a crisis; he was, too, a fine field who caught some splendid catches at mid-off and in the deep.

No account of Haileybury cricket would be complete without reference to the very great loss that was sustained in the death of P. H. Latham. For many years he had devoted himself to the cricket of the school and generations of Haileyburians had come to look upon him as a guide, philosopher and friend.

Clifton have five losses to set against four wins, but nevertheless they defeated Rugby and Tonbridge, and made Cheltenham go all the way. They have little cause for dissatisfaction with their season, but it must be admitted that the wet wickets of the latter half of the term proved the undoing of most of their batsmen with the exception of Hampton, who is a really sound player, and incidentally captained the side very well. Their batsmen were for the most part dangerous rather than sound; on fast true wickets, their eye, strength and enterprise often carried them through, but when the ball was turning there was apt to be trouble; nevertheless Kennedy, Powell and Robson all did most useful work and were not the sort of batsmen whom their opponents could miss with impunity.

The strongest feature of the side was undoubtedly the bowling of Homan and Barlow, whose record can challenge comparison with any pair of school bowlers not excluding Anderson and Enthoven. They had the invaluable ability to bowl out the crack batsmen of the opposition before they had got a fair sight of the ball, and their summary treatment of Pugh and Sherwell probably contributed largely to Clifton's victory in those two matches; Homan's performance of taking twelve wickets in the Tonbridge match was clearly the best in the school's year. At present, perhaps, his physique is hardly strong enough for the strain thrown on him, but another year may bring him just that added consistency and stamina which he at present lacks.

Coates, also, did useful work with the ball, but I cannot believe that a left-hand bowler should have been allowed to grow up to bowl off-spinners. It is surely no wonder that he was at times expensive. There were some good individual fielders in the side, but the general standard was not really high.

Barlow is Captain for 1923, and has seven old choices to support him. If a little more soundness and restraint can be instilled into the batting Clifton should have a formidable side.

Tonbridge had the long programme of fifteen matches—no wonder when everyone in Kent plays cricket and when cricketers everywhere seize the opportunity of playing on their beautiful ground. With a record of ten losses against only two wins, they cannot, I am afraid, be written down as anything but weak. In N. B. Sherwell, they certainly had a fine cricketer and excellent captain. An industrious correspondent informs me that he only let 120 byes out of 5,600 runs scored against the school; this, and his record of fifteen caught and sixteen stumped surely speak for themselves, and I should write him down as certainly the best school wicket-keeper of the year. As a batsman he was also first-rate, sound and withal punishing—he made three centuries and finished the season with an average of 53 for 745 runs. Wills, Howard and Eggar also did quite well but, apart from the captain, there was little real distinction about the Tonbridge batting.

A glance at the bowling averages will show why Tonbridge won so few matches. A. G. Greatrex got through an immense amount of work with his slow leg-breaks, and had the satisfaction of taking more than fifty wickets. Unfortunately, however, the fielding of the side—and especially the catching—was far below the Tonbridge standard, and Greatrex, in particular, suffered severely in this respect.

In school matches, Tonbridge went down before Lancing by six wickets and were badly beaten by Clifton in the big match at Lord's. Greatrex is Captain for 1923 and will have with him Pell, Hubbard, Howard, and Mitchell, the latter a very young batsman of distinguished cricketing stock.

The Malvern Eleven of 1922 came out with as fine a record as any school side, in fact they were unbeaten. Most unfortunately both their school matches, against Repton and Westminster, were spoilt by bad weather, but by general agreement they had, in the short time available, proved themselves the superiors of Westminster. The Repton match provided some extremely interesting cricket; winning the toss, Repton took first innings on a wicket so wet and sodden that bowlers and fielders alike were sorely handicapped. They seized their opportunity and by enterprising and attractive play ran up a total of 349. Malvern could only reply with 107; they were no doubt—and quite naturally—somewhat discouraged by their heart-breaking experience in the field; nevertheless, all credit must be given to an admirable piece of bowling by the Repton Captain who, keeping a beautiful length and at times turning the ball back sharply from the off, came out with the really fine figures of six for 15. Repton must have slept well that night. The next morning, however, there was a different story to tell; the Malvern wicket recovered, as it knows so well how to do, and after a splendid struggle between bat and ball for the opening hour and a half, the real class of the home batting asserted itself, and with Holmes, Jagger and Legge all playing in first-rate form, the total reached 227 for three wickets before rain put an end to the game.

The cricket of the side was laid on sure foundations; Legge was an excellent captain who knew how to get the best out of his bowlers, and had a sound control of his eleven in the field. The batting was, even on the Malvern standard, really strong as a glance at the averages conclusively proves. Jagger was perhaps the most dangerous of them all, though an experienced bowler might as yet hope to find one or two weak places in his defence. The captain was sound and specialized in those beautiful off-side strokes of which Malvern has given to cricket so many splendid exponents: but probably the best class cricketer of them all was Holmes, who is described as "a very correct player of high promise who watches the ball and can score all round the wicket." Lewis and Welch were two other excellent players, and the former who was not sixteen last season may train on into a batsman out of the ordinary.

In bowling, Malvern were very well served by Holmes and Jagger; the former who will captain the side this year was that rara avis in these days, a definitely fast bowler. Moreover, he had the two great requisites of untiring physical energy and great determination and his record of forty-three wickets for under 15 runs apiece, is, on the Malvern ground, really remarkable. In one match he took all ten wickets for 36 runs.

Jagger also did excellently, and although his action leaves much to be desired he could keep a length and squeeze some life out of the most unpromising wickets; he bowled very well against Westminster. Welch, too, did surprisingly well with the ball for so young a cricketer.

To sum up, Malvern were a side always desperately hard to beat owing to their batting strength, and, with Holmes and Jagger in form with the ball, likely to push the strongest opposition hard to stave off defeat. One fact, not without a sinister significance for their future opponents has yet to be mentioned—five of this formidable team were under seventeen last summer, and may still be available in 1924!

Repton seemed to have returned last year to something like the form of their best days. There were, perhaps, no outstanding personalities in the eleven, but it was a sound well-balanced side, particularly strong in batting. The bowling, with the exception of Winter was not perhaps very formidable, but the fielding, a weak spot in 1921, was last year up to the highest standard and it is wonderful what all-round excellence in the field will do to reinforce a moderate attack. The collective batting strength was great; each of the team, it is said, were capable of making fifty, and eight of them did so. Hilleary and German were an excellent opening pair with sound defence and plenty of strokes, especially on the on-side. Buxton was a dangerous hitter, and Ashton made a big advance on his form of 1921. The steadiest and soundest bat in the eleven was Dudgeon, who was almost always to be depended on for runs. For a year or two past, the Repton batting is said to have suffered somewhat from a certain lack of enterprise and over-emphasis of on-side play. I was, therefore, no little pleased to read the testimony of that ancestral, but always friendly enemy of ours, Mr. Charles Toppin, that their batting last year in the Malvern match had pleased him greatly in its enterprise and general method.

Returning to the bowling, I am bound to admit that far too much depended on their captain, Winter, but at the same time that he rose splendidly to his responsibilities; his six for 51, including the hat trick, clearly won the match against Shrewsbury, whilst his performance against Malvern, considering the strength of the opposition, was even more remarkable. At present he is, perhaps, rather temperamental, but with greater experience and such training as a captain like Mr. John Daniel can give him, he may well develop into an effective fast-medium bowler. Ashton, who is next year's captain, was a wicket-keeper much above the average. He kept for The Rest at Lord's.

The Uppingham season was, on the whole, uneventful; of the four school matches, that with Shrewsbury was cancelled owing to measles, while the other three with Haileybury, Rugby and Repton were all drawn. On each occasion the batsmen did well, but the bowling was not strong enough to secure a victory. In Loubser (fast medium), Terras (medium), Weir (googlies) and Waldock (slow spinners) the school had a quartette of fair variety, but unfortunately the catching of the side was very weak and the bowlers suffered accordingly from this lack of support.

The outstanding player in the eleven was no doubt J. V. Richardson, and it was not his fault that the fielding left something to be desired, for he was an excellent captain, and set his side a splendid example at mid-off. In batting he was sound and consistent and, as a change bowler, he had one spell of sensational success against Repton, when he summarily curtailed what promised to be a very long score. He is the type of natural games player who might easily do well at the University.

Hey made a century against Rugby, played admirably for 69 against the Authentics who included most of the Oxford bowlers and, with his strong defence and improving stroke power, is undoubtedly a batsman to be watched.

Waldock, fourth of the brotherhood, is very promising in all departments of the game. Hey will be captain in 1923, and will have Waldock, Loubser, the fast bowler, and two other old colours to support him.

Shrewsbury seemed to have been just a fair average eleven. Of their school matches, that against Uppingham had, unfortunately, to be scratched owing to illness in the latter school. In their one-day fixture with Repton, they had to admit defeat by 100 runs. The features of this game were a splendid hitting innings of 63 by Enderby for Shrewsbury, Winter's fine bowling, and the beautiful fielding of the Repton side on the whole. Against Rossall, however, they proved their superiority in no uncertain fashion, thanks largely to Stephenson's two innings of 40 and 130 not out, and good bowling by Prothero-Beynon. As a batsman, Stephenson was clearly in a class by himself. He is splendidly made, is a sound strong back player, and hits the off-ball as well as anyone can wish; Oxford will obviously be wise to keep an eye on him. Penn and Enderby both did quite well and have no misgivings about the proper treatment of the over-pitched ball. Barker and Robinson were of the slow, steady type and also did good service, but the batting of the side as a whole lacked solidity.

As to the attack, my informant laments the lack of a fast bowler and, naturally, Hewetson's departure left a serious gap. Clegg-Hill and Peard were both useful left-handers and Prothero-Beynon and Robinson often got wickets; but there was certainly no class bowler in the side and only consistently excellent fielding helped the attack to do as relatively well as it did. F. Robinson is next year's captain and will have three old colours to back him.

Rossall cricket must always, I believe, suffer to some extent from its inaccessibility, which prevents a visit from most of the leading touring clubs of the South. Moreover of their two school opponents, St. Bees are generally no match for them. This year was no exception, Rossall winning by over 200 runs. In the other game, Shrewsbury proved altogether too strong. The best all-round player was E. J. I. Whitcroft, who at times batted really well and often got useful wickets; as he is a first-class fieldsman at cover-point he is obviously—as captain elect—the right man in the right place. Smith also did quite well with the bat, and stuck to his fast medium bowling with great determination. Holland, the captain, was for a long spell out of form but, nevertheless, heads the batting averages, and Unitt bowled slow left-hand very steadily for the greatest aggregate of wickets.

Not content with their excellent record of 1921, Westminster went one better last year. In the long programme of thirteen matches and with the strong sides which habitually muster at Vincent Square to oppose them, they came out with the excellent record of seven wins and four draws against but a couple of losses; and when we add that among the wins are to be found four school matches, it is not surprising that Westminster cricket should think very well of itself.

Sherborne, Wellington, Radley, and Charterhouse all went down before them in the order named, indeed none succeeded in even seriously extending them. This year, for the first time, a two-day fixture with Malvern was arranged, the genesis of which is not hard to penetrate. Unfortunately, it was ruined by the weather, but for once Westminster's great opening pair of batsmen, Taylor and Lowe, did nothing extravagant with the bat, and when time came, Malvern were en route to establish a comfortable lead. Incidentally, I doubt whether any of the great schools has ever undertaken five inter-school matches before. Great, though, as was Westminster's success, their best friends could not gainsay that they were really a two-men side. C. H. Taylor has strong claims to be considered the best all-round school cricketer of the year; his batting figures for the school speak for themselves, and the way in which he made runs against the Army at Lord's greatly impressed all who were lucky enough to see him. As a bowler, his googlies were altogether too much for many school batsmen. At present, like most of his kind, he has expensive spells, but he has the courage of his convictions and is generally free from that most fatal fault in a bowler of his stamp—dropping the ball too short.

Lowe also did splendid work; he bowls a brisk medium and can swing the ball quite late; he was the steadiest of all the bowlers in the representative games at Lord's and with good slips to support him, he may well make his mark in a higher class. But for that we must wait another year, as he is captain-elect for 1923. In addition to the two protagonists, Stonier was on his day very useful with his leg-breaks and Hartley was a steady bowler of medium pace who could and did keep a length at need. Taylor and Lowe made a habit of running up a big score for the first wicket—twice they exceeded the second century—and it was well they did so, for the rest of the Westminster batting was not impressive. The one really weak spot in the side seems to have been the fielding, especially the slip catching, but Taylor was first-class at cover-point.

Charterhouse can surely not complain of any lack of incident in their season. Three of their four school matches produced a first-class sensation. In the first two against Winchester and Harrow, the home side on an adamant wicket piled up a total of over 300 and declared leaving their opponents the task of getting the runs at the rate of something well over 100 an hour. Against Winchester, they made the fatal mistake of missing Guise when his wicket might easily have meant the match; he remained to transmute pure defence into sensational hitting and with some of the later batsmen carrying on the good work the last over arrived with Winchester only 12 runs in arrears. The strain, however, was too much for the batsmen, one of whom was run out in going for a nearly valueless single and Charterhouse was saved.

Against Harrow they started badly, losing six wickets for 46 against Anderson and Enthoven, but then J. T. Morgan—a very young left-handed batsman—played a splendid not-out innings of 148 and with invaluable help from Kenyon (87) the total reached 306 for nine when Varcoe declared. Harrow began modestly, but Bagnall and L. G. Crawley then took root and scored a century a-piece; the former never hurried, but Crawley, to whom the Charterhouse wicket must have been a paradise, hit the bowling to all parts of the field and with Lloyd also taking the long handle, Harrow got home by six wickets just before time.

The Westminster match was a very different story; the Cartusians were completely at sea on the wet wicket they found awaiting them at Vincent Square and, in forty minutes, were all bowled out by Taylor and Lowe for 25 runs; the result was inevitable. In the remaining school match, Charterhouse gained a comfortable victory over the weak Wellington side, but that was their one victory out of a programme of twelve matches. On a fast wicket there was a good deal of batting on the side; Varcoe was a shaky starter but could drive finely when set. F. L. Barker was a free hitter, and there were four others who averaged over 20; but as long as Charterhouse remains on its hill, it is probable that Carthusians will suffer from lack of practice on turning wickets. The same conditions adversely affect their bowlers, who tend to abandon all hope of doing anything off the ground and to rely exclusively on pace or swing. This year was no exception. In A. N. Morgan, they had a real fast bowler, whose determination probably saved the Winchester match, but he was not consistent, and struck me as hardly having the physique for his great pace. Barker, also, was above medium, but cannot be labelled dangerous. Varcoe, who bowls just faster than slow, could be difficult when he kept a length, for he had some ability to flight the ball. Both on method and performance, J. T. Morgan must be counted a young batsman of real promise.

Sherborne had the satisfaction of knowing that they turned out last year an excellent fielding side, as quick and as much on their toes after a long outing as they were when they took the field; but this substantial re-inforcement could not altogether compensate for but a moderate attack; and the batting, though capable of doing well, was too often prone to make presents of its wickets to the opposition. As a matter of fact, six batsmen averaged over 20, but when we take into consideration the excellence of the Sherborne wicket and the moderate quality of some of their opponents the figures are not very convincing.

There was no outstanding batsman on the side, but it was a great misfortune that an injury should have kept W. E. Tucker out of the field almost all the season. In bowling, most of the work fell on his name-sake, H. J., and figures of thirty-seven wickets for 18 a-piece bespeak his value.

Olivier, slow left-hand, was also useful, especially in school matches but, like Tucker, he has not yet mastered the sovereign virtue of length. In the school games, Sherborne went down before Westminster, Radley and Blundells, and in the latter game the fielders for once had a real "off-day." They beat Dulwich, however, by nine wickets, and proved too strong for Downside in the first of their two fixtures with them.

Wellington, I am sorry to say, had a very poor season. Of their four school matches that with Bradfield was spoilt by the weather, but in the other three against Haileybury, Westminster and Marlborough they were easily defeated. They started the season with the severe handicap of having not even one old colour to lead what was bound to be an inexperienced side. Their best hope was that some of the new hands should meet with early and pronounced success to give them confidence, but this was not forthcoming, and the eleven never came on as much as a reasonable amount of fresh talent led its supporters to hope.

Dobson was the most consistent of the batsmen and scored nearly 400 runs, while White also comes out with a fair record, but no one averaged 24 and only the two mentioned over 16. The attack seems to have been similarly mediocre, though Haig, who bowls fast with a nice action did fairly well, especially in the opening hour of the Marlborough innings. When I add that the fielding was also some way below standard, it will be seen that Wellington had indeed a lean year, but with Albert Relf to coach them, it will surely not be long before things mend again.

Radley, owing in some measure to their vicinity to Oxford, played eighteen matches; surely as long a programme as is undertaken by any school! Of these, they won five, lost six, and drew seven. They beat Sherborne in a low scoring match in which Hudden and Morris bowled well for them and were supported by excellent fielding. In the Westminster match, Taylor and Lowe had a field day with both bat and ball. Radley were out of form and the result was never in doubt.

The game with Bradfield must have been great fun to watch, no fewer than 592 runs being scored in a single day for the loss of but twelve wickets. The Bradfield batsmen made very light work of the Radley attack and had rattled up 303 for six when they declared. Nothing daunted, Radley went in pursuit and with Blair playing splendidly for 110, Robinson (83) and Amory (not out 42) backing him up well, they actually got to within 14 of their points when stumps were drawn.

As a batsman, Blair stood out by himself and came out with the really splendid figures of 979 runs with an average of 54. It is good to hear that he makes most of his runs in front of the wicket, favouring especially the off-side. With another year's development and experience behind him he should be well in the running for a place in The Rest side next August.

Heathcoat-Amory and Dawnay also did quite well with the bat; the latter, of course, is Blair's partner at racquets. He has beautiful wrists and a real temperament for match play; I shall be surprised and disappointed if he does not make a big advance this season.

Of the bowlers, most of the work—and heavy work it was—fell on McConaghy and Hudden, who each took nearly fifty wickets. The former is still young and may be a serious proposition for Radley's opponents next year. The fielding, it is good to learn was excellent all through the season, thanks to the keenness of the side and the trouble taken by Hudden, their captain. Westmacott was a wicket-keeper well above the average; Dawnay is captain-elect, and with Blair of old choices to bat, McConaghy and Morris to bowl, he has an encouraging nucleus.

Bradfield had to be content with a draw in each of their school matches. The Radley game, as we have seen, provided plenty of good cricket, but the Wellington match was spoilt by the rain. The side was fairly strong in batting with Wyatt and Waggener the pick of the bunch; the latter came off well in both the school matches, and is a left-handed batsman who has no misgivings about putting the bat against the ball.

Birbeck, Carless, and Preslie did most of the bowling; the latter two bowled right-hand slow medium, but were not much more than steady change bowlers; Birbeck, left-hand medium, is really promising; he has the sovereign quality of length and can both spin and swing the ball; I hope he will not over-do the latter to the neglect of the former.

From a long programme of sixteen matches St Paul's came out with a distinctly good record, for nine victories are to be set against six defeats, and of these that at the hands of the Cryptics was by a margin of a single run. In the inter-school games they went down before Bedford, but defeated both Dulwich and The Leys. Undoubtedly the most sensational feature of the season was the number of extraordinary close finishes in which the eleven took part; three matches saw a margin of less than 10 runs between them and their opponents at the finish, another of 16 runs, and another of only two wickets. The batting figures make no very remarkable reading, but Olliff and Hilliard did very well to average over 30 and to their consistency the side owed much. In bowling, however, it is another story, for St. Paul's were blessed with a quartette of bowlers who, I fancy, might have compared favourably with any four at any other school. Between them they took 126 wickets at an average of under 15—a very remarkable performance when we remember how many good cricketers St. Paul's come up against in the year. Moreover they were supported by fielding that is described as quite first-rate; had the eleven included a couple of other batsmen of real class they would probably have stood high in comparative order.

Bedford School had a shorter programme than St. Paul's, but of their ten matches only one, against the M.C.C., was lost; six were won outright and, most satisfactory of all, four of these were against school rivals. The one drawn match was against Wellingborough School, in which they piled up the huge total of 314 for one wicket before rain put a stop to play. The back-bone of the eleven was undoubtedly their captain, W. Bovell-Jones, who had a brilliant season with the bat, and was deservedly given a place in The Rest side at Lord's. His record of having scored 2,000 runs for the school in three years cannot often have been equalled in school cricket. Of other batsmen, Bailey was sound and at his best in school matches while Stewart was a hard hitting on-side player who often did good service. Robinson, too, was promising. In bowling most of the work fell on Naz and Cox with Bovell-Jones often lending a helping hand. Naz was the real mainstay of the attack, and could always be relied upon to bowl a length. The fielding was consistently good, sometimes—as against St. Paul's—brilliant, and Davidson did splendid work at slip throughout the season.

From Dulwich my information is very scanty; the averages, especially of the bowlers, do not read at all badly. Corbin, Hewett and Rix all did good work with the bat and the two former must be useful all-round players, but Brighton provided their solitary victim in school matches and they went down before St. Paul's, Sherborne, and Bedford.

Of Lancing's ten matches, five were won and only two lost, and as three of the five wins were over school rivals, the season can certainly be written down a success. Brighton beat them on the County Ground at Hove, thanks largely to a good innings by Philips and to some disappointing batting by Lancing of whom no fewer than eight failed to reach double figures.

The Christ's Hospital game was quite exciting; Newman played well for 66 but the total of 208 was not quite convincing; then Pearce made a very sound 100 for Christ's Hospital, and shortly before half-past six only five of their wickets had fallen for 173. Anything might then have happened; actually Burrough bowled well, the batsmen failed and the remaining five wickets fell for 11 runs.

Eastbourne were comfortably beaten at home but the Tonbridge match produced a sensation of the first magnitude. After see-saw cricket, Tonbridge made a big recovery and set Lancing 246 to win in two hours and forty minutes. Their captain, Newman, then set about the task in real earnest and hitting most brilliantly for 171 not out, brought his side into harbour with twenty-three minutes to spare. Newman was much the best batsman, and though without his big innings his figures would have been relatively modest, he was always dangerous and liked the big occasion. Eve and Burrough were two valuable all-rounders; the former was in great form against Tonbridge, and Burrough comes out with the biggest bag of wickets for the season. But Melsome was much the steadiest bowler and his figures of thirty-three wickets for under 12 are suggestive. Eve is this year's captain and has four old hands, including Burrough, to help him along.

Eastbourne's chief pride was their fielding which can fairly be described as excellent throughout the season; perhaps they made a virtue of necessity for the attack was frankly weak, almost everything depending on their two bowlers, Frearson and Ellerby. The latter is a medium pace left-hand bowler who kept a consistent length and made the ball do just enough either with his arm or with the spin to keep the batsmen on tenter-hooks; his record on paper is not startling but he was the mainstay of the school's out-cricket.

Frearson, who was easily the best all-round player, did so much batting that perhaps his bowling suffered somewhat; however, that may be, he got the biggest bag of wickets to add to a really fine batting record of 600 runs for fifty an innings. As he is also an excellent field, more may yet be heard of him.

Some way behind Frearson comes Mackintosh, the sprinter and rugger player; he, too, did valuable work and scored a century in one match; at a similar interval behind Mackintosh, comes Strong, the latter can put to his credit his excellent work as captain and the first-rate example he set his side in the field.

Far and away, the outstanding performance accomplished by the side was their sensational win against time over Christ's Hospital, when Frearson and Hanford put on 173 runs together for the third wicket in well under an hour and a half. The two other school matches resulted in a rather unfavourable draw with Lancing and a sorry hammering at the hands of King's School, Canterbury, who actually knocked up 202 to one wicket against Eastbourne's 177.

The Brighton Eleven experienced a bad patch at the beginning and end of their season but for a month between mid-June and July did quite well when they defeated Lancing, drew with Christ's Hospital after a promising start and won a couple more matches. The batting showed improved consistency on the form of some recent years and this in spite of the fact that the side was exceptionally young, the majority indeed being under seventeen.

Philps was easily the outstanding batsman, as well as a capable captain and a first-class cover-point. After falling into the fatal delusion that it was his duty to hit the cover off the ball whatever its length and direction, he bought his experience, recovered his judgment and, at the end of the season, was on the road to adding defence to his considerable natural powers of attack.

Lyon and Walton also did quite well and Eastwood is promising in style; in bowling, Adams comes out with really fine figures, forty wickets for under 11 a-piece. From what I hear, he is a natural bowler of very considerable powers who has not yet learnt to make anything like the best of himself. I am sorry to say his official character ends with the words "cannot bat or field"; the former may, of course be a positive advantage but the latter is a serious business. Surely it can, and should, be remedied.

Adam's chief support came from Kilcoin whose fast bowling was often valuable; he, too, apparently was no batsman but is described as a first-class field. With Lyon as captain and eight other old colours still available, Brighton's prospects for this season are bright.

And now a dash over the border and my task will be done. Loretto had quite a good year in their school matches; they beat George Watson's, the Academy and Glengalmond, saw the weather put an irritating end to an even and interesting game with Merchiston, and were robbed by the same agency of what would surely have been their first victory over Fettes for twenty years. Their captain, Macdonald, was, as captains should be, the life and soul of the side, a fine leader, a splendid field and a most consistent performer with bat and ball, with the great gift of being at his best on the big occasion, witness his 118 and five for 38 against Fettes and his eight for 27 against Glengalmond. He is a left-handed batsman who does not believe in letting the grass grow under his feet, while in bowling his swerve is late and well controlled. Loretto can indeed be congratulated on having this fine cricketer to lead them again this year. The rest of the batting may not have been very distinguished but Dykes, after a poor start, played some good innings, and Mackinlay showed sound form. Scoular was a useful all-rounder and Gourlay's fast bowling, in spite of the wet wickets, provided excellent support for Macdonald. In fielding, the side made great strides as the season advanced and they were always a keen and happy family.

Fettes seem to have been even harder hit than most by the weather, a deplorably high proportion of their matches having been left unfinished. Still, they can find some consolation in their victories over The Academy, Merchiston and Glengalmond. In batting, Ferguson seems to have been well ahead of his colleagues and his average of close on thirty for 436 runs with a highest score of 70 means very sound work in such a summer. Ross, Sutherland and Berkeley also did good service and there was plenty of enterprise about the batting as a whole; no fewer than five bowlers obtained sixteen or more wickets, and as four of them averaged under fourteen a-piece it is not surprising to learn that the bowling was never really collared throughout the season. Cameron, Braine and Scott were a trio obviously not to be despised. There was plenty of life about the fielding and Berkeley made a good leader.

Merchiston had two excellent bowlers in Milligan and Logan. The former, who took sixty-three wickets for under 13 each, bowled slow left-hand and may easily be heard of again. The batting was unpretentious, but Sturdy and O'Neil were very consistent. In school matches, they had an interesting season; they opened with two defeats from Fettes and Watson's (the latter, however, by only two runs), they then did really well, and gave Loretto a fright in what proved a drawn game, were prevented by rain from defeating Glenalmond comfortably, and wound up with a win over The Academy after a thoroughly interesting game of cricket.

WINCHESTER v. ETON.

Played at WINCHESTER, Friday, Saturday, June 30, July 1.—Though showing a marked improvement in batting in the second innings to establish a strong position, Eton had not bowling good enough to force a victory. Still they might have won had they adopted a bolder policy and declared a little earlier. Winchester had no chance of getting the runs and were in grave danger of defeat when the match was given up as a draw, being 113 behind with only two wickets to fall. On a soft pitch batsmen, apart from Lord Dunglass and J. L. Guise, both of whom played with marked skill under difficulties, fared only moderately well on the first day, at the end of which Eton, two runs behind on the first innings, were 11 runs ahead with one wicket down in their second attempt. The turning point of the game came when W. P. Thursby and G. S. Incedon-Webber, after six wickets had fallen for 121, hit with such refreshing freedom that they more than doubled the total. During their splendid partnership the bowling was mastered for the only time in the match. Winchester struggled hard after Guise's failure, but a remarkable piece of bowling by R. G. Kennerly-Rumford nearly brought about their defeat.

ETON v. HARROW.

Played at LORD'S, Friday, Saturday, July 14, 15.— It was a thousand pities that the Eton and Harrow match should have been ruined by rain. Not victorious at Lord's since 1908, Harrow had got together such a good side—especially strong in batting—that they were really hopeful of at last breaking their long spell of ill-luck. Unfortunately however, rain put cricket out of the question on the first day, all hope of play being abandoned at half-past three, and on Saturday, with the ground much too soft and wet to be difficult, a draw was always inevitable. A fresh pitch having been rolled, play began at twelve o'clock, the game resolving itself into a fight for a first innings lead that had no significance. Considering that the first day was a blank, the attendance was wonderfully good, over fifteen thousand people paying for admission. All through the day the cricket was just as keen as if a definite result had been in prospect. The Eton batting did not strike one as being particularly good, but Dawson and Lord Dunglass, who put on 103 runs together for the second wicket, played well in their different styles. In getting his 66 out of 103 in a little over an hour and a half Dunglass hit three 4's and five 3's, the ball travelling very slowly on the saturated outfield. Dawson, out third at 120, was at the wickets for nearly two hours. The long partnership was not well followed up. Llewellyn Davies hit three 4's, but his attempt to force the pace was soon cut short by a good catch on the on-side. Harrow for a long time stood in danger of a follow-on, the rule for one-day matches applying, but they did not have any serious anxiety. By far the best and most attractive batting of the match was shown by the two Crawleys. Allowing for the difference in the pace of the ground, L. G. Crawley hit quite as brilliantly as in 1921, his 53 including ten 4's, and C. S. Crawley took out his bat after playing with great skill for an hour and a half. He was especially good on the leg side.

1871	Eton won by inns. and 77 runs	1921	Eton won by seven wickets
1872	Eton won by six wickets	1922	Unfinished; no play on first day

Ninety-three matches have been played, of which Eton have won thirty-nine, Harrow thirty-five, and nineteen have been drawn. This is the generally published record, but Harrow men object very strongly to the game in 1805 being treated as a regular contest between the two schools, contending that it is no more correct to count that than the fixture in 1857 which has been rejected.

The one day matches between the two schools during the War are not counted as belonging to the regular series.

Twenty three-figure innings have now been played in matches between the two schools, as follows :—

183 D. C. Boles	(in 1904), Eton	112* A. W. T. Daniel	(in 1860), Harrow
173 G. Wilson	(in 1913), Harrow	108 C. J. Ottaway	(in 1869), Eton

114 C. P. Foley	(in 1886), Eton	131 M. C. Bird	(in 1907), Harrow
113 W. F. Forbes	(in 1876), Eton

In making his 183 Boles set up a new record for the match, beating the 152 obtained in 1841 by Emilius Bayley, afterwards the Rev. Sir John Robert Laurie. Bird in 1907, by scoring 100 not out and 131, performed a feat without precedent in the match.

CLIFTON v. TONBRIDGE.

Played at LORDS, Monday, Tuesday, July 31, August 1.—This proved a very one-sided affair, Clifton winning by an innings and 13 runs. In gaining such an easy victory they owed much to Homan, who was irresistible in Tonbridge's first innings, and took in all twelve wickets. There was some good batting for Clifton, but Robson had a little luck in getting his 61. Kennedy gave a remarkable exhibition of hitting, his 69 including a 6 to leg and eleven 4's. Tonbridge followed on before the first day's play ended, and their efforts next morning to avoid a single innings defeat fell a little short of success. Greatrex, though rather expensive, bowled his slows with marked success for Tonbridge.

RUGBY v. MARLBOROUGH.

Played at LORD'S, Wednesday, Thursday, August 2, 3.—Following drawn matches in 1920 and 1921 Marlborough had the satisfaction of beating Rugby by ten wickets, the end being reached at half-past four on the second day. Rugby never recovered from a dreadful breakdown in their batting on Thursday morning. In face of a total of 298 they were in rather a bad position with four men out for 93, but no one was in the least prepared to see their innings finished off in less than an hour for 125. When they followed on the Marlborough bowling was never mastered, and it was only some plucky hitting by Pattisson that averted a single innings' defeat. As the game was played, Marlborough had decidedly the better side. Ashfield took all the batting honours with his 114. Playing in excellent style for two hours and a half he hit thirteen 4's.

CHELTENHAM v. HAILEYBURY.

Played at LORD'S, Friday Saturday, August 4, 5.—Though the match had to be left drawn the finish was exciting to a degree, Cheltenham, when time was called, requiring only five runs to win. Haileybury took a great risk, declaring with six wickets down and leaving Cheltenham two hours and a half in which to score 225. When Cheltenham's fourth wicket fell at 84 cautious batting became imperative, but, with the danger of defeat over, Duleepsinhji and Lumsden made a desperate effort to hit off the runs and only just fell short of victory. Apart from the finish the great feature of the match was the play of Hudson—the best Haileybury batsman for many years. He was at the top of his form in both innings, scoring 90 out of 174 in two hours and a half without a mistake and giving only one difficult chance in his equally fine 101.

LORD'S SCHOOLS v. THE REST.

Played at LORD'S, Monday, Tuesday, August 7, 8.—This annual match, always looked forward to nowadays with extreme interest, was ruined by the weather and left unfinished. Not a ball could be bowled on the second day, and soon after three o'clock the game was abandoned. On the Bank Holiday the pitch was very soft and the ball beat the bat all the afternoon. Of the best-known batsmen in the two elevens, Hudson alone did himself justice, playing admirably for his 34. Guise captained the Rest with excellent judgment and, as will be seen, took three wickets at a trifling cost.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS v. THE ARMY.

Played at LORD'S, Wednesday, Thursday, August 9, 10.—This was another drawn game, but quite an interesting one. In showery weather on the first day the Schools found their bowling mastered by Wilkinson and Williams, who put up 164 together, but the score of 361 for seven wickets, at which the innings was declared on Thursday morning, would have been largely reduced but for deplorable fielding. Phillips, in scoring his 44, was missed seven times. The Schools had to follow on against a balance of 207, but they saved the game in brilliant style. Guise and Hudson gave their side a capital start by scoring 72 together. Guise was batting for an hour and forty minutes. Taylor was also seen at his best, and Crawley drove with splendid power, getting his first fifty runs in half-an-hour.
