

PUBLIC SCHOOL CRICKET IN 1923.

By H. S. ALTHAM.

In one respect at least the season of 1923 was the exact reverse of its predecessor : in 1922 we began gloriously, so far as the weather was concerned, only to be plunged into wet and gloom just when we were getting into our stride : last year we suffered for the first six weeks or so from such a spell of rain and wind and piercing cold that cricket was seldom enjoyable and often a misery : just when our loyalty to the game was strained almost to breaking point Fate relented and by the end of June we were panting where we had shivered, and bowlers were beginning to realise that the tide had turned strongly against them.

Now in so far as these conditions reacted on the training of the young cricketers I am inclined to think that in batting at least they did so unevenly : what I mean is, that on the dead and often difficult wickets of the early weeks one of two attributes—though preferably, of course, both—were almost essential to success—class or brawn. Where there was real batting ability they served to drive home the necessity for footwork and watchfulness in defence, and to develop the hook and the drive in attack : the less gifted, but sturdy batsman perhaps found defence rather beyond him, but being by nature well equipped for attack he would often collect a valuable twenty or thirty in quick time, when his correct but more artificial fellow would be intent merely upon keeping up his wicket. It was a trying time for the really young batsman and for his coaches : defence was naturally difficult, he had not the power to score much in front of the wicket, and the hook stroke needs both experience and skill if it is not to be a very dangerous expedient : what was perhaps worse, timing the ball was always difficult and timing and confidence go hand in hand.

For bowlers, on the other hand, the conditions were not so unfavourable—at any rate for those of medium pace who were thereby encouraged to bowl a length and give the ground a chance with such spin as they could command : the confidence of success stood them in good stead when later the batsman came into his own and demanded good length and a stout heart for his uprooting. Spin bowlers pure and simple were very badly handicapped by the cold and judging from results never, in several cases, recovered. As a matter of fact the really slow and the really fast bowler is nowadays something of a rara avis in school cricket.

Before we turn to the personnel of the season there are just two questions that I have been asked to touch upon. Of the first, which concerns the placing of the field, I said something last year, but personal observation and the strongly expressed opinions of several expert critics tempt me to believe that in this respect school cricket is a good deal less efficient than it could and should be. No-one, nowadays, would like to revert to the once accepted system under which the cricket coach could, as on a historic occasion at Lord's, send out to the school captain in the field an irate and peremptory message: "Are you managing the bowling or am I?" But in the nature of things the management of the field is largely a matter of experience and imagination, and the first can be largely provided and the second stimulated by the cricket coach in conversation with the school captain before and after all trial games. Among the faults that seemed prevalent last season were—the placing of the slips too fine and much too near each other, mid off and mid on very much too straight ('picking the bowler's pockets' as one exasperated gentleman had it) and too close up on fast wickets, and the out-fields, especially deep extra cover and deep leg, attempting a futile compromise between letting go the one and saving the four. Then again there seems often enough to be little attempt made to adjust the situation in accordance with the peculiarities of the wicket or of the particular opposing batsmen. Personally I shall always believe in making a new batsman fight for his runs—even the singles—on any wicket, but how often one sees an outfield and a deep third man standing idle and wasted when the batsman is, for the time being at any rate, intent only on keeping up his wicket. Conversely when once he has got set and is exploiting shots, he is often allowed to go on doing so, when a little readjustment of the field into an inner and an outer ring would be converting his fours into ones, and, what is much more important, making him fidgety and impatient.

The second point upon which I have been asked to say something is a much more delicate question, and I do so with considerable diffidence. There is a growing feeling in a good many quarters that school cricket, and indeed school athletics generally, is suffering from an excess of publicity. On the principle that the reading public really determine the contents of any paper, this publicity is perhaps surprising but it is none the less a fact. Eton and Harrow, and to a less degree Winchester and such schools as appear at Lord's, have been more or less accustomed to having their prospects discussed their performances criticised and their personalities described: but of recent years the process has extended to practically every school of athletic standing: few school cricketers of outstanding performance escape altogether the ever-widening arc of its limelight, and "close-ups," whether by camera or pen, seem to meet a growing demand in not merely the purely sporting papers. Of course, the schools nearest London are most favoured or hardest hit.

Now it may be objected that the remedy lies in the schools own hands—to shut the door if they think fit and intimate politely that they are not at home to the Press. As a matter of fact cricket fields for the most part have no doors, and moreover most schools are perfectly ready, and indeed anxious to have the scores of their matches recorded and on big occasions at least the play and players described, for the sake of a widely scattered, but still intensely interested, circle of old boys. No amount of publishing of score sheets can do much harm: figures, more or less, tell cricket truth, and the elation of seeing three of them opposite one's name in print generally provokes Nemesis to provide a salutary and effective antidote. The crux lies in the match reports, and in the periodical reviews of contemporary school performances which are becoming increasingly common in the London Press. I am not suggesting for a moment that the writers—many of them players of distinguished experience—have not the best interests of the game, and of amateur cricket in particular, at heart: it is their occasional methods that seem open to question. A school cricketer, worth his salt, should be able to stand both praise and criticism, but it is very important that both should be judicious, and based upon unmistakable evidence, and there does seem to be a growing tendency to write up school cricketers into a class to which they do not yet belong, to use superlatives when positives are adequate, to compare a boy to some great cricketer on the strength of a single innings or even of one or two strokes. As for the criticism, it will, I think, be generally agreed that except for slackness or breaches of the spirit of the game, this should be temperate and should err on the side of generosity: but what is more important it that the critic should be very chary indeed of advocating change in method unless he is quite sure of his ground. There have been cases—and recently—of good school cricketers paying more attention to comments in the press than to responsible advisers at home—and with disastrous results. Finally I record, as at least deserving of consideration, the opinion of one school coach of long experience, that in reporting two-day school matches experts, especially those whose names naturally carry great weight, should so far as is possible content themselves with description until the match is over and abstain from such criticism, whether destructive or constructive, as may possibly unsettle individuals, especially the captains, for the second day's play.

And now for a word or two as to a few of the leading inter-school matches, and the two representative matches at Lord's. Harrow had done none too well in their trial games, and after defeat at the hands of Charterhouse and Winchester there were not wanting Jeremiahs to prophesy disaster in the big game at Lords, in spite of the notorious weakness of the Eton bowling. The batting of the Harrovians, however, which had rallied considerably in their last games, confounded the critics when it was put to the test, the bowling of both sides reached, by common consent, the lowest mark known in the history of that game for a generation, and a great innings by the Harrow captain in the last stage of the match won for his side quite an honourable draw. Apart from Stewart Brown's innings the outstanding features were the batting of Dawson, who followed up his great display against Winchester by an even larger and more patient innings, a very attractive partnership for the eighth wicket by Cobbold and Newman, the resolute hitting of the later Harrow batsmen, the splendid Eton off-side fielding, the waste of time over irritating and, it would seem, superfluous delays, and above all, the astonishingly bad length bowling. There were some who criticised Eton strongly for not forcing the pace on the second morning, but it is to be remembered that had Kennerley-Rumford not been incapacitated from bowling in the last innings, Harrow might easily not have saved the match.

Winchester also experienced the strength of the Eton batting, or more accurately of Dawson's and Arkwright's, whose partnership of 301 is a record for this game, but the Wykehamists had batted well enough themselves on the first day to earn the draw which they effected, though not without quite a tense half-hour towards the end of the match.

In the other school matches at Lord's, Rugby, though showing improved form on that of 1922, were once again no match for Marlborough. I have heard it said that they rather over-estimated the difficulties of the wicket in their opening innings, and certainly they collapsed disastrously after quite a promising start. For some time Marlborough looked like winning only a small lead, six wickets being down for 113, but then a partnership of almost legendary good fortune between Smith and Harbinson put them on top, and only Hechle, who again batted excellently saved his side from an innings defeat.

Cheltenham and Haileybury had a ding-dong match, full of interest, and proved themselves two school teams well up to average, with very little to choose between them. Duleepsinhji was clearly the best cricketer engaged, and batted fully up to his reputation, the tail of each side wagged courageously at the critical moment, and Formby and Meyer both bowled extremely well, Clifton came up to Lord's for their match with Tonbridge with an unbeaten record, and at no time looked like losing it, though the rain prevented a definite result, and under the rather depressing conditions prevailing the form of both sides was a little disappointing.

Apart from the matches at Lord's there are only two that seem particularly worthy of mention; the first is the rather surprising victory of Cheltenham over Marlborough by ten wickets, and the second the dramatic finish to the Repton and Malvern match in which the former, though risking defeat, went all out for a win, and thanks to a wonderful bit of hitting by Watts and fine sportsmanship by the Malvernians, just got home. But of both these games I shall have something to say later on.

The selection of the two sides for the first "Trial Match" at Lord's met with general satisfaction: in marked contrast with the preceding year the match was blest with beautiful weather, and played on a very fast wicket. For the first time since the war the Lord's Schools beat The Rest, and that by a margin of nine wickets, which on the actual run of the play hardly exaggerated their superiority. The bowling of The Rest was rather ordinary, and their batsmen, with the exception of Holmes and Blair, were out of form or luck. The former, however, played a splendid innings and confirmed all the good things that had been reported of him. For the Lord's Schools Duleepsinhji was in great form with both bat and ball, and Stewart-Brown, who captained the side well, increased his reputation both as batsman and wicket-keeper. The match excited considerable interest, over two thousand people paying at the gate, which is all as it should be, though curiously enough the attendance fell away very greatly at the game against The Army. In this match there was always "something-doing" in the wicket, the ball coming along at varying heights: the Schools' batting in the first innings against some very good length bowling by Captains Fowler and Kirkwood was most disappointing, only Duleepsinhji and Dawson playing within a measurable distance of their reputations, after the bowlers had done reasonably well to dismiss The Army for 235. Following-on they did better, Hilleary playing an attractive innings, and Smith making history with a wonderful piece of patient defence by which he defied the soldiers' attack for over four hours and a half, during which time he made 57. The Army took their task of making the 106 necessary for victory quite seriously and accomplished it with seven wickets to spare. On the whole the form of the Schools was rather disappointing, but it is to be remembered that the match comes at the end of a very arduous season, and there is little doubt that, by the time it is played, some of the leading school cricketers are, for the time being, tired or stale.

As regards the standard of school cricket in general I do not think that 1923 has strong claims to be regarded as a 'vintage year.' Certainly there was no outstandingly good eleven, though several were up to a very fair standard with apparently very little between them. The Eton batting was so strong that, as in 1922, I really cannot see any of the school sides beating them outright in a match of two days on a fast wicket. Conversely I am perfectly clear that before stumps were drawn in such a match the Light Blues also would have had their belly-full of fielding. Clifton alone preserved an unbeaten record, Winchester only just missed doing so, and Marlborough I know from personal observation to have been a strong, well balanced side: but the latter went down to Cheltenham by ten wickets, and Cheltenham in turn were well held by Haileybury. Malvern were obviously good and Repton beat them, whilst Sherborne showed perhaps the biggest advance of any team. No, I am not going to attempt any classification: suffice it to say that there were probably half-a-dozen sides who would have at least taken guineas to pounds for their chances against any school opponents: after all that is a very healthy and stimulating state of things.

Turning now to individuals, we may note with some satisfaction that of the stars of 1922, some at least have fulfilled their promise, notably C. H. Taylor, L. G. Crawley and N. B. Sherwell: incidentally it seems lamentable that no opportunity in county cricket was afforded to R. H. Hudson who, I am told, batted extremely well at Woolwich all the summer. Once again last year there were plenty of batsmen at the schools who showed good enough form to make their future development at the Universities and elsewhere a matter of interest, but real bowlers were few and far between. Formby (Cheltenham), Lowe (Westminster), Meyer (Haileybury), and possibly Forbes-Bassett (Sherborne), were about the best individual performers, and in Duleepsinhji, Jacomb-Hood, Tiplady, and Neve they had each a very useful support. Stewart and Grimston (Winchester), and Shorter and Baines (Repton) were also two pairs above the average, whilst Smith (Marlborough), Greatrex (Tonbridge), Terras (Uppingham) and Woolf (Malvern) were all of great value to their sides.

Of the batsmen I am inclined to put 'Duleep' just above the rest on the score of rather greater natural ability, and considerably greater resource than his fellows. Dawson has clearly earned a niche in the temple of fame, but he will have to develop his stroke-play if he is really to come to the front. Hey's defence was extremely good, but he too is very slow. The same may be said of Holloway. Blair and Holmes, Cassels and Arkwright were all good and were attractive players: the former, I am sorry to hear, may not have the chance of playing much more cricket in England, but Holmes, with another year still to go at Malvern, has great possibilities. In Stewart-Brown, Abell and Ashton, the season produced three wicket-keeping batsmen of exceptional merit, who are likely to have a great fight for the vacant place in the Oxford eleven.

One other point, and these preliminaries shall end. At the end of last season Mr. Charles Toppin retired from the position as cricket coach to Malvern, which he has held uninterruptedly since 1887, an event which surely calls for more than a passing reference in any review of public school cricket. It is not merely that in holding this position for 37 years he has, I am inclined to think, set up a record unequalled by any resident school coach, professional or amateur, in the history of the game, though R. A. H. Mitchell was for 34 years in charge of Eton cricket. But Mr. Toppin in the first place rescued Malvern from the dangerous seduction of lawn-tennis, and then, blessed by fortune with a succession of brilliant natural athletes built up a tradition of batsmanship which, for attraction of style and splendid execution, can fairly challenge comparison with that of any other school in a similar period in the game's history.

In the theory of coaching he stands uncompromisingly for the doctrine that for boys, provided that the main principles are sound, attack shall come before defence, that stroke play must be learnt at school and defence will follow easily and efficiently in proportion to the need forthcoming for it. In these days, under the ever-increasing influence of professionalism, such a theory is often proclaimed heresy, but Mr. Toppin remains unshaken, the more so, I suspect, because he regards cricket not merely as an art, but as a national asset, and believes that for it to continue to exercise the best influence on national character it must remain attractive and 'sporting,' and that this issue lies to a great extent in the hands of the amateur batsman. And when all is said, Mr. Toppin, as he leaves the stage, can fairly answer 'Si monumentum requiris circumspice.' Under his aevis Malvern have turned out a succession of extremely good sides, beginning with the Foster era in the nineties, continuing in the fine side under W. H. B. Evans in 1901, and F. T. Mann's all-round team of 1907, on through the times of Knight, the Naumann's, and Norman Partridge, down to the good elevens of the last two years. As a proof of their exceptional strength, particularly in batting, I am tempted to try to select a side of Malvernians from the years that enjoyed Mr. Toppin's guidance. Here it is:—H. K. Foster, R. E. Foster, C. J. Burnup, S. H. Day, A. P. Day, W. H. B. Evans, D. J. Knight, W. S. Bird, G. H. Simpson-Hayward, H. L. Simms, N. E. Partridge. And even then there seems to be no room for W. L. and G. N. Foster, P. H. Latham

F. T. Mann, or H. H. Marriott (a very fine player at school). Assuredly Mr. Toppin must have satisfying memories to take with him as he hands over the reins of office.

Once again Eton had, on results, a curious and rather unsatisfactory year. As against their ten draws, one defeat, and one victory of 1922, they could at the end of last season point to nine draws, no victory, and two defeats. Of the latter one was in their opening fixture with the Liverpool Club, and in the other the Household Brigade and Captain A. C. Wilkinson in particular, seized with both hands the chance offered to them by a sporting declaration. In the great majority of the drawn games Eton had certainly none the worst of the argument.

By common consent they were one of the weakest bowling sides that the school has known for many years. Bridgeman, their captain, and last year a dangerous bowler, anyway with the new ball, bore the brunt of the attack, and took most wickets; but for some extraordinary reason neither he nor any other bowler, native or visiting, could last summer swing the ball to any appreciable extent on Agar's Plough: with his swing went half his danger and at no time in 1923 could he be labelled as in any sense formidable. Nor was there any bowling discovery to counteract this loss. Kennerley-Rumford, whose tragic death in August on the eve of his departure with the Free Foresters to Canada was lamented by a wider than Etonian circle, seemed at the beginning of the year to have considerable possibilities as a fast bowler: with his great height he would in the old days have been most formidable on Agar's Plough, but on the present beautiful wickets it was very rarely that he seemed able to squeeze out the extra little bit of pace that would have made all the difference. For half an hour on the last evening of the Winchester match when the pitch was beginning to wear, he was very unpleasant to face, and it was a great blow to Eton when an old strain revived at Lord's and rendered him hors de combat for the crucial Harrow second innings. The rest of the bowling was very much of a muchness: there was no left hander, and no genuine spin bowler, though Cobbold, who could turn the ball and was slower than the rest, must be labelled a future possibility. Bateson was really the steadiest of the lot: Incedon-Webber, though he could bowl a good ball without knowing altogether how, was in the main terribly expensive and unreliable. So much then for the Eton bowlers, somewhat discouraged, perhaps, by the difficulty of bowling out very good sides on very good wickets, but neither individually nor collectively strong or even very steady.

Of the Eton batting there is a very different story to be told: the figures which open in the region of the fantastic, and average out at very high, speak for themselves. Cobbold and Newman only went to the wicket six times between them and were only outed once each, so that their averages of 179 and 104 are not quite what they appear: but the great bulk of each aggregate was obtained in the all important match at Lord's, when together they produced just one of those eleventh-hour demoralising stands which one has almost come to associate with Eton cricket. Newman is said to be a rather laborious starter, but once set he has plenty of power and is quite ready to use it. Cobbold is young—very young to achieve the great distinction of a century at Lord's—and with his clean true style and good cricket temperament, he may very well develop into something out of the ordinary. Thursby had rather a disappointing season and was always a nervous starter, and Hurley quite failed to reproduce his first year's form; Kennerley-Rumford was a batsman of great possibilities who never quite found a consistent and ordered method, but when once safely over the first few overs he could and sometimes did play brilliant cricket, using his great height and reach to advantage. Webber is by nature an accomplished all-round athlete: he would play strokes or even perhaps an innings that would suggest great things, but temperamentally he was most unreliable, and whether in the slips, batting or bowling, he lacked the concentration which would have made the best of his unquestionable ability. Crossman, who as a wicket-keeper developed considerably as the season advanced, was a very useful left-handed bat of the cheerful driving order that seems natural to his kind. But the mainstay of the batting, and indeed, one may say, of the side, were Dawson and Arkwright; and very good they were. Dawson has yet to make his mark for his county, but his niche in school cricket is safe and secure with his two centuries in the one year against Winchester and Harrow: his motto is "Safety first," and though in better company he may have to modify its interpretation, it certainly made him a desperately hard nut to crack last season. In method he is rather modern—very strong on the on-side and a good back player: in temperament imperturbable and always anxious to learn. Arkwright had greater advantages of physique, and was a more upstanding and aggressive player: he had not quite so sound a defence, and was liable at times to be clean bowled playing forward for no very apparent reason, but he too was splendid at forcing the over-pitched ball on the leg stump, and could hit freely on the offside. His 175 against Winchester, in a partnership of 301 with Dawson, was a really fine innings.

The Eton ground fielding was very good: Kennerley-Rumford, Dawson and Hurley were quite exceptional at cover, extra cover, and mid-off; the one weakness lay in the slips, who were rather uncertain, and for the second year running had a bad day against Winchester.

Next year's captain will be D. M. Bateson : only Cobbold and Hope, the twelfth man, will be left over from the 1923 side, but of batting at least there never seems to be any lack at Eton.

It was not to be expected that Harrow could maintain the form which last year had made them at least the equal of any school eleven. They started the season with but two old colours, their captain Stewart-Brown and the surviving Crawley : the attack had therefore to be built up afresh and the bulk of the batsmen to buy their experience in the stiff trial matches that every Harrow side has always to face. Not unnaturally the team for the first six weeks or so was largely experimental, and proportionately unreliable, and in mid-June their prospects for the great match at Lord's could not have been regarded as very rosy. Certainly their record up till then was not inspiring : Charterhouse had beaten them rather unexpectedly on the Harrow ground, and Winchester more decisively on New Field. On the other hand there had been some evidence in the club games that the batting of the side, if rather an uncertain quantity, was very far from being negligible, and that they had a bowler or two of promise, though not yet of sufficient performance to be labelled dangerous. As has already been seen the Harrow batting was at its best at Lord's, but the bowling at its worst, and the powerful Eton batting took full toll. Nevertheless, a young and inexperienced side came out of the ordeal with a very fair share of the honours of war, and delighted many of the critics by their confident and attractive batting.

In this department Stewart-Brown stood out some way ahead of the rest : he is strong and confident, orthodox in method and decisive in all his strokes : as a batsman alone he must have a future, but he is, of course, in addition a very good wicket-keeper, attractive in style, if perhaps a little uncertain with his catches. Crawley and Kemp both did quite well with the bat and the former has the makings of a really good player : at present he rather lacks judgment, but if he can settle down the family talent for ball games may well take him far. Foster took a long time to find his form, but he played one of the best innings of the match at Lord's, and has the natural gifts of a batsman. Hermon was rather disappointing, considering his promise of two years back, but the Butterworths both showed considerable promise : J. C. only came into the side late in the season, but proved himself a watchful player only needing increased power and experience ; R. E. C. is a natural forcing batsman, confident and very capable in dealing with the wide-off ball. Brigstock, as he proved most conclusively at Lord's, has a true eye and a true swing of the bat : it is safe to say that he will not go in No. 11 this year.

In bowling, the last-named and R. Butterworth were the two real possibilities : the latter I am sure is a bowler of promise with his elastic run and action, and a natural gift for swinging the ball a little either way rather late in its flight : it was a perhaps inevitable tragedy that, bowling as well as he did from the start of the season, he was sorely overworked, and the life had gone out of him when he faced Eton. Brigstock was never sound in the back for long at a time, but with the new ball he was a dangerous bowler, and with another year in his loins he may bowl a good pace this coming season. Hermon and Crawley did a good deal of donkey work without very much to show for it on paper, but each could at times keep an end going fairly steadily. And then there is Andreae, whose bowling at Lord's was a wonder to behold : a genuine spin bowler this, with a flight low enough and a spin big enough to make him a real danger in school matches, if—and it is a very big if—he can learn to control his length. The Harrow fielding was on the whole very fair and showed a good deal more energy than in some years past, but there is still room for improvement in the collective standard and the friends of Harrow cricket would welcome nothing more warmly than the appearance of a really first-class fielding side.

As regards next season hopes may run high : the old sorry tradition of a collapse at Lord's was not even reanimated by the triple run-out at the start of the match, and a new tradition of confident batting on orthodox lines seems well under way. With seven old colours returning Crawley is blest with considerable resources in both batting and bowling with which to face his duties as captain in 1924.

Winchester opened the season with but moderate prospects, but at the finish could look back upon their work with a good deal of satisfaction. True, they had only time to thank for saving them from defeat at the hands of Marlborough away, and after scoring well against Eton they ran up against some very good batting, and had for a time to set their teeth to secure a draw, but they won conclusive victories over Harrow and Charterhouse on their own ground, and in their club games did not once lower their colours until in the very last match the heat and their good friends the Green-jackets proved too much for them.

Perhaps there was not very much real distinction about their cricket, but they were in the best sense of the word a team, and had the no small satisfaction of knowing that by keenness and perseverance they had succeeded in giving of their best. The side could bat down to No. 11, as they showed at Eton, fielded energetically and, for the most part, well, though without much pretension to brilliance, and they had a good pair of school bowlers who together took seventy wickets at 18 apiece. As long as the wickets gave them any help Stewart and Grimston really did all that was required of them, and were at their best in the two school matches which were won.

When the weather mended the strain began to tell, and there was unfortunately no reliable change bowler to keep runs down while they might rest. Grimston, who bowled fast medium was, on his day, the more dangerous of the two, as he could spin the ball back quite sharply from the off, and wasted no time off the pitch, but Stewart was the real mainstay of the attack, and considering the immense amount of work thrown upon him his record was really fine. He had a natural swerve from leg, could bowl a good slow ball and above all he kept a length. Of the others who bowled, Awdry got several useful wickets and has possibilities if he can settle down; but Sinclair, whose leg-breaks had promised well last year, never found his form with the ball. In batting, however, he headed the averages and was the most naturally gifted player on the side: quickness of foot and a real instinct for timing brought him many runs in front of the wicket: at his best he was very attractive to watch, especially on the off-side, and he succeeded in improving his defence materially. Frazer started the term shakily, but found his form in mid-June and batted extremely well in both innings against Eton: he is very straight in defence, unusually good on the on-side, and with more experience and confidence should develop into a really good batsman. Horsley too is promising and sound, and so is Kingsley, a very young cricketer who thoroughly justified his selection by playing three excellent innings at critical times in three out of four school matches. McGowan was a useful hitter who played very well at Eton, and Palmer set a splendid captain's example by playing the best and highest innings of his life in the same game—and a very good one it was. Hoare began well on the soft wickets, but his right-handed methods got him into trouble when the sun shone. Awdry, Thring, and Grimston were all to be reckoned with as batsmen, and the side, as a whole, showed plenty of readiness to attack the over-pitched ball with a reasonably vertical bat.

Palmer was a cheerful and thoughtful captain who got the best out of his men, and though rather uneven behind the wicket, at times kept well. Next season C. E. Frazer will be captain: Awdry, Horsley, and Kingsley will be available, there should be a good deal of batting at hand, but the bowling may be a different story.

For the second year in succession Rugby were denied success in any of their inter-school games, and once more went down to Marlborough in their big match, by the same margin as in 1922—ten wickets. Nevertheless they were a much better side than a year ago: they had no batsman so outstanding as Pugh, but as a team were far better balanced, and the fielding showed a great and welcome improvement, though, judging from what was seen at Lord's, there seemed some room for criticism in the disposition of the field. In Cassels and Hechle they had two excellent batsmen, both of whom came out with fine records. The former, who played splendidly in his innings of 200 against Clifton, was an attractive player with plenty of strokes and the ease of movement that one associates with the natural batsman. Hechle was of a more 'modern' compact type, using his feet well in defence, strong on the leg-side and an excellent cutter: he has a first-rate temperament for match play, and gave of his very best at Lord's. Some way behind the two cracks came Longrigg, a sound and consistent player, and Pattisson and Cartwright, two hard-driving and courageous batsmen. The bowling, too, showed improvement on last year's form, but badly lacked steadiness, though it possessed some variety. Goodbody, a fastish bowler of fine physique but not very convincing an action, came out with considerably the best figures. Cassels, medium paced, got through a lot of work and his swing needed watching, but he had to pay a highish price for his eighteen captures. Daniel got some wickets, but has not really come on as a bowler. Milford was interesting, and was perhaps the most likely man to dismiss a really good batsman: bowling slow medium left-hand he could spin the ball considerably, especially from the off, but he would probably be more valuable and certainly less expensive, if he adopted the ordinary slow left-hander's method.

In school matches Rugby held their own against Uppingham and Clifton, though their bowling was not strong enough to do more; at Lord's they played below form, their crack batsmen more or less failed, and Marlborough, who certainly enjoyed some fortune, proved themselves considerably the stronger side.

Pattisson, who kept wicket well last season, will again captain the side this year: Cassels, Milford, and two other old colours will be available.

Repton had once again a satisfactory side and came out very successfully from their inter-school games, though they had a couple of unaccountable collapses in club fixtures. They had to be content with a draw on the Uppingham ground, but defeated Shrewsbury easily at Repton, and just beat Malvern and the clock in what was certainly the most exciting of all the big school-matches of the year, a game that will always be memorable for Watt's wonderful hitting in the last innings, Ashton's determination to go for a win at all costs, and the Malvern captain's splendid batting and fine exhibition of sportsman-ship in the nerve-wracking finish.

In batting Hilleary, Ashton, and German stood out above their fellows: all these are all-round athletes above the average, who may well make their mark in University cricket as the first two have already done in Association football. Of this trio Hilleary is probably the best as he is certainly the most attractive batsman and withal a good cover-point and a slow left-hand bowler who could keep a length at need; German and Ashton are both sound players with a good enough defence to promise well in better company: the latter, who captained his side excellently, is also a very good wicket-keeper, especially on the leg side, whose claims are bound to be considered at Oxford. Burton showed a great advance with the bat, and is really promising; Watts was a genuine hitter with a frankly unorthodox method and a fine heart, and Buckland, who is very young, had an excellent opening season.

In bowling the bulk of the work fell upon Shorter and Baines, who together took eighty-four wickets for under 14 apiece—a distinctly notable achievement. Shorter, who bowled medium pace, was most accurate and was always troublesome by reason of his ability to swing the ball in from the off, sometimes very late. On performance he must be rated as one of the best bowlers Repton has produced for some years, and it is regrettable that he will not be seen at either University. Baines bowled rather faster and worked untiringly: his action is rather laboured, but there could be no question as to his value to the side. Apart from these two stock bowlers, there was Rennick who bowled fast and may well be an unpleasant fellow to face next season; Burton, Hilleary and Shorter also all got wickets at times. The fielding was reliable and very keen, and in Burton and Buckland Repton had two really first-class slips whose value to the side's attack could hardly be exaggerated: the latter, in his first season, caught no fewer than eighteen catches, surely a record in school cricket. To sum up, Repton were a well balanced side, ably captained and pulling together, and they would probably have gone into the field against any other school feeling that they had at least a chance of success. R. O. Burton is captain elect, and in Watts, Buckland, Rennick, and Hobbs (12th man) he has at least a promising nucleus on which to build.

Uppingham had what one may term a rather quiet season, and were perhaps a rather quiet side in the sense that their batting was watchful and sound rather than attractive. But there was plenty of cricket in the team, and if they failed to defeat any of their school rivals, they were not easy to beat, and wrested a draw from Repton, Rugby, and Haileybury, going down, curiously enough, to Shrewsbury in a close game by a margin of 38 runs.

Easily the outstanding figure on the side was the captain, S. Hey, whose fine match temperament and sterling defence again and again carried the side through difficult times. He was at his very best in the school games, as a captain should be, only once in seven innings failing to reach the half century, and his season's average of 59 for an aggregate of 531 runs represents really good batting. Perhaps at times he was over-cautious, but so much depended on him that he could not afford to take risks: a less onerous atmosphere at Cambridge may help him to develop his stroke play: his defence is already first-class. After Hey there was a big drop in the batting, but Atkins and Dodgson were distinctly useful, and Pope, a young batsman who came into the side very late, holds out good promise.

In bowling Uppingham had two fair change bowlers in Waldoek and Uniacke, a rather uncertain but at times dangerous bowler in Layton, and an excellent and reliable man in Terras. The latter's record of thirty-six wickets for 16 each is out of the ordinary, and his length and swing always made him formidable: Layton could be very difficult with the new ball, but was apt to deteriorate. There was a marked and most welcome improvement in the fielding, especially the catching.

Before leaving Uppingham mention must be made of the opening of the new pavilion, which took place during the Old Boys' match on Founders' Day last summer. The site was the gift of Mrs. C. E. Green, the building itself of Mr. W. S. Patterson: it will therefore serve to commemorate two of Uppingham's most famous players who won distinction for themselves and their school, not merely on that picturesque and perfect ground, but on even more famous fields. Among those present at the opening ceremony was the widow of the late H. H. Stephenson, perhaps the most famous school coach of all times, and certainly the 'fons et origo' of Uppingham's cricket renown.

Malvern came very near indeed to repeating their unbeaten record of 1922. Of their ten fixtures three were drawn (all in their favour), six were won, and only the Repton match was lost after a mighty struggle, vastly enjoyed by both sides, and proving that there was very little to choose between them. As is generally the case there, all the side could bat, and, what was really more to the point, seven of them could bowl, and in a variety of ways. Woolf, on the slow side of medium, comes out with the record of forty wickets for just over 15 each, and this is distinctly out of the ordinary for the Malvern ground and deservedly earned him a place in the Rest side at Lord's. Abrams too, did well and Greenstock's slows often got a useful wicket. Had Holmes bowled up to his form of 1922 the Malvern attack would have been strong, and the side as a whole really formidable. Unfortunately a strain early in the season threw him out of action and at no time was he at all himself as a bowler. His batting, on the other hand, made a big advance and was the mainstay of the side. After a somewhat uncertain start he struck form in good earnest and right on to the end of the school season and afterwards at Lord's played in a style that won golden opinions from all who saw him. His physique is very good, he can drive the ball very hard, especially on the off-side, and there is about all his batting something of that ease and certainty of movement with which nature endows the objects of her favour. He was withal an inspiring captain. Welch, who got into the side young in 1922, was considerably handicapped by hay-fever, but still did well enough to be second in the averages and to prove himself a batsman of real promise. Foster and Toppin justified their names by playing a number of useful innings and were conspicuous in the field. The fielding of the side as a whole was well up to the mark, and Aird did creditably as a stumper.

Next year the redoubtable Holmes will still be at Malvern to lead the side for a second time, and with the great majority of the old colours remaining on, their opponents may look out for trouble.

Shrewsbury can on the whole look back upon last season with considerable satisfaction. True they lost half-a-dozen matches, but they won a like number, and these included all five of the two-day fixtures they played, and—best of all—two out of their three school matches. They gave their supporters a nasty turn by batting very badly in the opening innings against Rossall, but recovered well, and their bowling was always too good for the rather weak opposition. The Uppingham match was a somewhat laborious affair, in which Shrewsbury batted moderately, bowled steadily, but only just succeeded in beating the clock by ten minutes, Uppingham being set 229 to win in four hours, and actually batting three hours and fifty minutes for 196!

Against the strong Repton team Shrewsbury lost the toss on one of the hottest of days and were never in the hunt.

The batting averages, not unnaturally in so young a side, work out rather moderately, but Barber was a player of real promise, with a sound defence and strong on the leg side, who made a fine century against the Foresters, Enderby a really fine driver, and Smallpiece is young and promising. In bowling, there was perhaps no real match-winner, but the collective strength was very considerable, and Pomeroy, Dodd and Snow were a trio of youngsters who really did remarkably well, and may easily be a power in the land next season. Robinson, the captain, also did useful work. As the fielding reached, as a whole, a high standard, it is safe to say that Shrewsbury only lacked a little more experience and class in the batting to have proved themselves a school team well above the average, and their doings next summer, when Barber will captain them, will be watched with considerable interest.

Rossall were once again a weak side, and only won a single match out of their programme of eleven fixtures. Shrewsbury were too strong for them, and the game against St. Bees was drawn after some interesting and even cricket. The trouble was that, with the possible exception of Earnshaw who played very consistently, they had no batsman of any class: with a little more strength in this department they might have done reasonably well, for in Fenwick and Turnbull they had quite a good pair of bowlers, who together captured seventy-six wickets for just over 16 each. Gibson, who will captain the side in 1924, was a good stumper; and last year's skipper, Whitcroft, was in great form all the season at cover-point.

Marlborough, with their four victories over their school opponents, could in 1922 challenge comparison with any of the sides: once again last year they had a good all-round team, with no particular star excepting possibly Abell, but with plenty of batting, both defensive and offensive, half-a-dozen bowlers of desirable variety, and good keen fielding to support them. Personally I doubt whether they were quite so strong a combination as in the preceding year: certainly their batting averages work out rather better, but their bowling was more expensive. Moreover, in match records they had last year to admit defeat in three of their club games, and—the real fly in the season's ointment—a ten wicket reverse at the hands of Cheltenham. I fancy that the most ardent Cheltonian would hardly suggest that there was this much difference in quality between the sides or deny that they were materially helped by the drizzle at the start of the game which made batting easy for them and, turning subsequently to rain, produced a rather 'poppy' wicket for their opponents who had hitherto seen nothing but plum pitches at home. On the other hand it is arguable that Duleepsinhji with the bat and Formby with the ball showed cricket of a rather higher class than anything of which the Marlburians were, under the conditions, capable. In their other school fixtures they easily accounted for Wellington and Rugby, and were only just prevented by the clock from beating Winchester for the second year in succession.

In the batting averages Abell comes out some way ahead of his colleagues, and inasmuch as he was a wicket-keeper very distinctly above the average, who was in wonderful form against Rugby at Lord's, he must be set down as one of the outstanding school players of the year. Lord and Heard were an excellent opening pair, Streatfield was a really brilliant hitter with a not impenetrable defence, and Coleridge and Rotherham dangerous players whom it was expedient to get rid of early if trouble was to be avoided. Collectively the Marlborough batting was distinctly convincing: there was very little 'modernism' about it, and a very refreshing ability to deal with the over-pitched ball strictly on its merits. Moreover, its component parts fitted in well together with three sound orthodox batsmen, three forcing players to hammer in the nails in their opponents' coffin or knock out any that threatened to nail down their own, and—last but by no means least—the astonishing Smith, to exasperate the other side with his short runs, his picking up of unconsidered trifles (overthrows cheerfully accepted), and with his wearying but unwearied defence.

If he had never made a run Smith would still have been about the most valuable member of the side. For one thing he was an excellent fielder in the "gully," where he caught a number of first-rate catches; as a bowler he made a very marked advance on his form of the preceding year, and was the best left-hand school bowler of the year; his length was good, he had both the slow held-back ball, and the faster one at his command, and, perhaps most important of all, he had the true bowling temperament, optimistic, resolute and enterprising. To support Smith there was the captain, Streatfield, who bowled fastish left-hand, not very steadily it is true, but with a dangerous ball up his sleeve, and another left hander, Hawthorne, without much subtlety but with a length. The right-handers, Waydelin, Coleridge, and Rotherham, were all medium paced: Waydelin was the most reliable, but Rotherham had perhaps the greatest possibilities, and met with marked success in the first innings against Rugby. The Marlborough fielding was quite good—Coleridge at cover has beautiful hands—and there was any amount of life and confidence about the side as a whole.

Undoubtedly the outstanding feature of the Cheltenham season was the ample revenge taken for their defeat at the hands of Marlborough in 1922. Perhaps what luck there was ran in their favour, but Marlborough were a good all-round side, and victory over them by ten wickets was a memorable achievement.

In their other school fixtures Cheltenham had to content themselves with draws against both Clifton and Haileybury, but in each case they must have left the field feeling that they had had as much of the argument as their opponents. There were, of course, two outstanding cricketers on the side, Duleepsinhji and Formby, of whom I shall have something to say in a minute, but as the season progressed increasing support was forthcoming from other members of the side in both batting and bowling: in fact, perhaps the most satisfactory feature of the year as a whole was their capacity to recover from unpropitious situations, as in the efforts of Jowett and Foster against Clifton, or to reinforce the work of their two champions, as in Pacey's bowling against Marlborough or his hitting at Lord's. Collectively the batting averages work out quite well, six of the regular players averaging over 23: Higson, Rome, and Jowett were all useful school batsmen, Pacey a valuable hitter who made the most of his fine physique, Tyler played several sound innings as one of the opening pair, and Thomas came to the rescue of his side when things looked quite black against Haileybury, and was a good deal better than his record suggests.

In bowling Foster got through a lot of hard work, though his form was variable. Jowett was a useful change, and Pacey produced one big performance when it was most welcome. But in this department nearly everything depended on the two outstanding cricketers of the side, Formby and 'Duleep.' The former, in spite of a very uneconomical run, successfully met the heavy calls made upon him and proved himself a very good school bowler: his pace is slightly above medium, he can turn the ball back appreciably from the off, bowl the one that goes straight on without any apparent change of action, and withal make the ball nip off the ground at an uncomfortable height if the pitch gives him any help. His bowling in the second innings against Marlborough reached a really high standard. And finally we come, as one of my predecessors in these pages was wont to say, to "assimilate our biggest strawberry." Duleepsinhji was distinctly less successful with the ball than in 1922, his captures dropping from fifty to thirty-five, and the cost of each rising from $13\frac{1}{2}$ to $18\frac{1}{2}$: his value as a bowler was nevertheless great, and he may easily be successful in better cricket where the genuinely slow spin bowler is becoming something of a rarity: perhaps he is apt to toss the ball a little too high, but he has the great virtue of inviting the batsman to come and hit him, and of not presenting him with many balls short of a length. In batting I feel strongly disposed to waive all qualifications and write him down frankly as the best of the year. In natural gifts of eye, wrist and footwork he is certainly blest far above the ordinary measure: this year his defence seems to have improved considerably, without this costing him any of his strokes. Watching him bat against Haileybury I was most struck by his cutting and by his power of forcing the ball, whether short or overpitched, to the on-side. This latter he may be inclined to overdo, and I very much hope that he will not allow it to impair his off-driving, but there is no doubt about the judgment and certainty with which he takes toll of straight balls of anything but the most immaculate length. His late cutting is quite beautiful, and there is a certain ease and maturity about all his batting methods that stamps him as of a different class from the ordinary good school batsman. As he is also a fine fielder, with a good cricket brain which made his captaincy a real asset to his side, his future career will be watched with close interest. Though he has left school, he will not, so I am told, be going up to Cambridge until October in 1924.

Five of last year's Cheltenham eleven will still be available next season, but at the time when my correspondent wrote the captaincy had not yet been allotted.

In my last year's article I was tempted to prophecy that Clifton had only to instil a little more soundness and restraint into their batting to prove themselves a formidable side in 1923. It is interesting now to see that in this they were successful, and as a consequence became a school team whose record can challenge comparison with any, and indeed is the only one to show no defeat—at least among the big schools. Nevertheless, what I had in mind when I wrote the forecast was not really fulfilled: in 1922 Clifton had a really good pair of school bowlers, Homan and Barlow; had they fulfilled their promise or even maintained their form, the side might well have been the best school team of the year; but 'dis aliter visum.' Homan was quite successful, and still dangerous with the new ball, but no longer the match-winning bowler of 1922, while Barlow proved ordinarily steady and nothing more. Fortunately Kennedy and Alpass did much to reinforce the attack and each came out with creditable records: indeed the collective bowling figures read quite well, but my information suggests that it just lacked the class that makes the difference between winning and drawing matches. As a matter of fact this is borne out by their three big games—with Rugby, Cheltenham, and Tonbridge.

In batting they were undoubtedly strong, with eight of them averaging over 20 and six over 25, and this—be it remembered—for the most part on slowish West-country wickets. Williams heads the table, and is a sound batsman of real promise, especially good at off-driving: but the palm must go to Holloway whose unshakeable defence and imperturbable temperament made him quite invaluable. He may not possess any attractiveness of style, but a man who bats for an hour and a half or more in eleven out of the fourteen innings he plays is clearly the factor mainly accountable for the team's unbeaten record. Barlow may have fallen away as a bowler, but with the bat he made an immense advance and played some fine forcing innings, especially on big occasions, in which he rejoiced. He was also, so I am informed, a magnificent fielder, and a good captain. L'Estrange, Aslett, and Riddell were all constant run-getters, worth every run of their average, and Powell played one big innings. In 1924 only Aslett and Alpass of old choices will be available.

The Tonbridge averages have always to be somewhat discounted, because that ground is a batsman's paradise, and enough to make a bowler take to lawn tennis, but there is a certain levelness about the figures for last season that suggests that there was more 'body' to the side than has been the case in some recent years. Certainly Howard and Greatrex must be written down as outstanding performers, but they enjoyed a very fair measure of support. The latter can look back upon his season as captain with considerable satisfaction, for not only did he lead the side well and set them an excellent example in the field which the others were zealous to follow, but for the second year running he took over fifty wickets with his slow-leg breaks, and at a slightly lower cost than in 1922. In Pell, Hubbard and Mitchell he had three quite useful bowlers to back him, though none of them could be expected to run through a side.

As a batsman Howard had a very good season, played a remarkable innings against Lancing, and was always out to attack the bowling. Mitchell, who is still very young, made a great advance with both bat and ball: steadiness is the keynote of his cricket, and his innings against Clifton at Lord's was at once the highest and the best on his side. Miller, a late discovery and also very young, is considered really promising, and played, I am told, extremely well in the Under-Sixteen game at Lord's in August. There was a good deal more batting in the team, they were by no means an easy side to dismiss, but the bowling was not strong enough to make them really formidable. Against Lancing Howard's hitting nearly enabled them to beat the clock, but the Clifton match was drawn after a rather desultory game largely spoilt by the weather conditions. Prospects for next year are distinctly bright, with Hubbard as captain and five other old choices, including Mitchell and Miller, returning.

Radley beat Bradfield very easily, but went down before both Sherborne and Westminster, and only succeeded in winning two out of their long list of club fixtures. On individual form it looks as if they were capable of a better record, and it is possible that they and their bowlers in particular suffered from too long a match programme. For one thing, however, the season will always be memorable—Blair's feat of scoring over a thousand runs with an average of 67. Possibly his defence may not be too secure on turning wickets, but his stroke-play is very fine, his physique splendid, and by his inclusion in the Schools side against the Army, he was deservedly recognised as one of the great school bats of the year. Dawney, necessarily a little overshadowed by his partner, began the season rather uncertainly, but batted extremely well in the later matches, and, as anyone who has seen him play racquets would expect, was a joy to watch when once well set. Rowland had an excellent first year in the side, and should make plenty of runs next year, whilst Morris was invaluable as an all rounder and at his best in two of the school matches, 74 v. Sherborne and eight for 23 v. Bradfield. Dundass met with considerable success as a slow-bowler and his record, considering the good wickets at Radley, is most creditable. McConaghy, who bowled fairly fast, got through a tremendous amount of work (312 overs) and, with increased strength, may well be a power in the land next season, for he is steady and has plenty of perseverance. The prospects for 1924 are fairly bright, though Blair and Dawney will inevitably be much missed; Morris will be captain, and four others are remaining.

Bradfield can look back with satisfaction on their defeat of Wellington, to be set against their sad collapse against Radley immediately on arrival from a longish and cold motor drive. Being a young side they naturally took some time to settle down, but before the season was over several of them had made good a claim to be written down as promising cricketers. Birkbeck, Roome, and Wagener were a very fair trio of bowlers, and the former, left-hand, had clearly the lion's share in the win over Wellington. Wagener was also a left-handed batsman of merit, and Oliver did useful work in both departments, being one of those interesting and now all too rare characters—a lob-bowler. Dashwood was also a very fair batsman and played a good innings of 75 against Wellington. The fielding was respectable. With Birkbeck returning to captain the side again in 1924 and Wagener and five others to support him, the prospects for next season are quite good.

Sherborne showed a very cheering advance on their recent form, and their match record of eight wins and two losses out of twelve games is really good. Indeed, had not Downside most unexpectedly turned the tables on them in their second fixture after a heavy defeat in the first, Sherborne would have had the supreme satisfaction of winning all five of their inter-school games. As it was Blundell's were beaten easily, Radley by five wickets in a hard fought match, and Westminster by 100 runs in what should have been a two-days' fixture but was limited by rain to one and regarded, by agreement, as a one-day match. There was plenty of batting in the side, as the averages clearly indicate, and Nunn, Wright and Macdonald were all players above the average, who believed in putting the bat up against the ball. But the big man on the side was obviously Forbes-Basset, who averaged 25 with the bat, and with the ball took fifty-four wickets for 11 runs apiece—a really memorable achievement, which might readily have won for him a place in 'The Rest' Side at Lord's. Neve, Turnbull and Olivier all lent him valuable help in the attack, and if the Sherborne wickets were up to their usual standard of excellence, the bowling figures of this quartette are quite remarkable.

In short, Sherborne cricket looked up with a vengeance last year and with Nunn and Wright to bat and Neve to bowl in 1924 it may very well continue in the path of prosperity.

Wellington, who in 1922 were a totally inexperienced side and had a really rather disastrous season, made a distinct advance in all round form last year, though their match record was still very modest. Playing five school matches, they lost to Marlborough and Westminster rather easily, collapsed dismally before Bradfield, but played quite good cricket to draw with Haileybury and Charterhouse. In the first match, after establishing a lead of 64 on the opening innings they perhaps erred on the side of caution in their second, and thereby lost a chance of a win: in the second, at Godalming, their bowling was thoroughly collared, but their batsmen made a courageous reply (234 for three) to Charterhouse's big total of 360.

In batting Dobson stood out head and shoulders above the rest and his figures for the season are really good. He has nearly all the strokes, played two very good innings of 113 and 49 in the Haileybury match, and with another year still at school, he may make even a bigger name for himself in 1924. There were several other batsmen of promise on the side, of whom Cowie was the best, but taken as a whole they were not reliable. The real weakness, however, was in the bowling and fielding: the latter was very uncertain and lacking in dash, while of the three more or less stock bowlers none averaged less than 23 per wicket. Bryan was the best, but suffered from dropped catches. But it was a young team, and the six of them who are staying on, with Dobson to lead them, should profit by experience and be able to give a much better account of themselves.

Westminster had this year lost Taylor, to win distinction on other fields, but in batting McBride proved a worthy successor, and in bowling Jacomb-Hood imitated his method with great success. Lowe was still left and on individual and aggregate performance had claims to be considered the outstanding all-rounder of the schools' year. He averaged 51 with the bat for a total of 668 runs, and took fifty-one wickets for 14½ each. Only time will show whether it is to be as a batsman or bowler that he is destined to make a mark, and how big that mark will be: but from what I hear, I rather fancy the latter. He is not yet a genuinely fast bowler, but he is distinctly "pacey," with that invaluable quality of "nip" from the pitch, and his action is fluent and attractive to watch. For his pace, too, he was very steady, and he could swing the ball either way when new. In batting (left-handed) he is at present perhaps brilliant rather than sound, but no man can score over 600 runs in a school season without having a fair degree of defence. His best innings was certainly his century at Malvern, when his side had their backs very much to the wall, but his greatest feat was that of taking nine wickets (eight clean bowled) against a strong M.C.C. side and following it up with a finely hit 90. At Lord's in August he was out of form with the bat. As a batsman McBride was, on figures, at least, only a little way behind Lowe. At present he is a strong defensive player with an admirable temperament, very good on the leg side, but rather weak as yet on the off: a man who can score three consecutive centuries in school matches must clearly be ranked as one of the personalities of the year, and if he is available, as is hoped, to captain the side next season, his development will be watched with interest.

The last, perhaps the least, but certainly a very useful member of the Triumvirate was Jacomb-Hood, who thoroughly justified his selection when very young in 1922. His batting showed a marked advance and is full of promise, while his bowling, slow leg breaks, was quite invaluable to the side. These three cricketers really carried the team on their shoulders, for, truth to tell, there was not much other batting and no other bowling. How well they answered the heavy calls made on them can be seen from a glance at the match results which showed eight wins to be set against five losses and one draw: unfortunately they were not always at their very best in the school games and, whereas in 1922 four of these all-important meetings were won, last season Westminster, though successful against Wellington and Radley, went down before Sherborne, Malvern, and Charterhouse. The Wellington win was a good performance, but the 'battle of the Pinks' found the visiting side deservedly beaten owing to an unaccountable failure with the bat on a good wicket. Six old choices will be available next May, and the cricket tide seems flowing strongly at Westminster just now.

The Charterhouse record looks quite modest on paper, four wins, five losses and three draws, but among their victims were Harrow and Westminster, so that the season was not without material satisfaction. Harrow were fairly beaten away, thanks to good batting by Crawford and Morgan, and some admirably steady bowling by Pritchett: the disastrous rout of 1922 at Vincent's Square was amply avenged at Godalming when the Charterhouse batting successfully defied the redoubtable Lowe, and Grove came out with a fine all-round performance. The Wellington match, also at Godalming, produced an orgy of run-getting, Charterhouse declaring at 360 for nine, but their opponents countering very pluckily with 234 for three. At Winchester on none too easy a wicket the Carthusians found Stewart and Grimston a formidable pair of bowlers, and though Pritchett again bowled excellently, the Wykehamists always had something in hand.

There were plenty of runs in the side, at any rate so long as the conditions were those normal at Godalming: Crawford and Harker-Taylor were too fine aggressive batsmen, the former especially being a very fine driver, and the latter playing brilliantly for his century against Wellington. Morgan, their young left hander, who played a great innings against Harrow last year, fell away, and seemed to have lost in freedom and confidence, but Quinney, the captain, Grove and Bett all did useful work.

In bowling Pritchett stood out by himself: bowling slow, medium left-hand with admirable steadiness, and some command of both spin and swing he came out with the really splendid figures of thirty-six wickets for 12 each, and that, be it remembered, in conditions which are enough to break most slow-bowlers' hearts. He had the sovereign virtue of keeping the ball well up and making the batsmen come and fetch his runs. It is a matter for regret that he is not recorded as destined for either University. The only other stock bowler was Bett, who stuck to his work with great perseverance and with a little more luck might have met with considerably greater success. Tomlinson had a good season behind the wicket, his victims numbering seventeen.

G. E. Blundell will lead the side next summer, and Morgan, Bett, and Carter of old choices will still remain.

The Haileybury record reads modestly enough with but two wins to be set against five losses in thirteen games. But it is always to be remembered that Haileybury is very handy for the London cricketer and much of the opposition is accordingly of a stiffish order. There was this year no Hudson to take the bowlers by the scruff of the neck, but the batting, if rather undistinguished, was pertinacious and the later men had a knack of asserting themselves just when they were wanted. The most reliable batsman was Hamilton-Smythe, who scored consistently well all the year and was at his best against Cheltenham at Lord's. Meyer, considering the strain thrown upon him, also scored well: he is a natural ball-game player, who only seems to need more solidity and experience to be really good. Battye and Bagley too averaged over 20 and Hope was valuable in the role of Scotton. But undoubtedly the strength of the Haileybury side lay in the bowling of Meyer and Tiplady who, as a school pair, could at least bear comparison with any others of the season. Meyer got through more work with the ball than any other school bowler whose figures for the year I have seen, but in spite of this he very rarely lost his length, and even at the end of term at Lord's there was a lissomeness and nip about his bowling which suggested a certain class. He was, as a captain should be, at his best in the school games, bowling very well in the second innings against Cheltenham and having a real field day against Uppingham—eight for 75 in the first innings and five for 39 in the second. No doubt the Cambridge captain will not lose sight of him. Tiplady was slower in pace and less formidable than Meyer, but he was a very persevering and enterprising slow medium bowler who seemed to have something in his flight and a head on his shoulders. All honour to these two, who together bowled 576 overs—very few other pairs exceeding the 400 mark—and really carried their side upon their willing backs. In their inter-school games Haileybury at least held their own, but on each occasion rain, time, or both prevented a decisive result. The Uppingham match they would almost certainly have won. Hamilton-Smythe is captain elect, with three old colours returning to help him.

Lancing had a capital season and quite fulfilled the promise of last year. They were lucky enough to have the services of their three stock bowlers of 1922 again available, and though all three fell away a little in attack, they all made a very big advance with the bat, and proved themselves all-round cricketers out of the common, to whom the success of the side was in a very large measure due.

Both Burrough and Eve scored heavily all the year, and in an attractive way withal, while Melsome, who was nothing of a batsman a year ago, became a really excellent man to open the innings, sound and steady but no sluggard. D. E. Eve and Pearsse also did quite well. In bowling Eve and Burrough got through a lot of work with their fast-mediums, and the former especially was in great form in the later matches. Melsome, slow right, was the steadiest bowler on the side, and could be relied upon to keep an end going for a long time. Pearsse had a swerve which made him dangerous at times, but his length was not immaculate. Machin kept wicket very well, and was especially strong on the leg side: he also got runs on occasions when they were most wanted.

In school matches Lancing drew with Tonbridge, replying to a big score with a very creditable total of over 300, and defeated Brighton, Christ's Hospital, and Hurstpierpoint, though the latter pushed them hard.

Melsome, who should be a fine cricketer, will captain them this year, and will have three other old choices to support him.

Brighton began well and ended well, but there was a disastrous period in the middle of the season, when everything went wrong, and two school matches—against Epsom and Lancing—were lost. This was disappointing after the fine batting form they had shown in their opening school game with Dulwich which was drawn, as were six other of their fixtures. The truth seems to have been that in both bowling and batting they just lacked class, though there were a number of quite useful performers on the side. Had Adams and Kileoan come on as much as was hoped, they would have been a formidable pair of school bowlers, but, though they took sixty-five wickets between them for just over 21 apiece, they were more expensive than in 1922, and their attack rather lacked method and head work. As a contrast Chester was a thoughtful bowler, who did quite well and, with a batting average of 26, was obviously the all-rounder of the team. Walter and Peel did well with bat, both favouring attack rather than defence: Lyon, the captain, was out of form for a time, but finished well, and Recordon is mentioned as a young player of promise.

Christ's Hospital School had an uneventful season, beating Leatherhead and Cranleigh, losing to Lancing and Eastbourne, and drawing with Brighton in a rain-ruined match. The batting was not very strong; Kemple was the greatest run-getter, and Giddings and Wright were two useful left-handers. The latter, who captained the side, was a good slow bowler who could spin the ball either way and keep a length: his record of thirty-one wickets for under 11 each is really good, but unfortunately he had only one other bowler to help him, Spence, fastish and on his day deadly, but not too reliable and over-fond of his slow ball.

Eastbourne started the term with rather slender resources and, with a young and inexperienced side, runs were not very easily come by, though the batsmen improved steadily in method and defence. This is all to the good, and when next season they take the field with ten old choices I have no doubt they will reap the reward of their painstaking work. In school games they beat Christ's Hospital and drew with King's School, Canterbury. Of their club games they won three and lost seven, but it is to be remembered that Eastbourne is so pleasant a place for cricket that visiting sides are apt to be very strong. Ellaby was the one noticeable all-rounder on the side and may develop into a really good bowler; Morris too, did well with both bat and ball, and Anderson, who headed the bowling averages, was perhaps the most naturally-gifted bowler on the side. In batting Frerichs showed a great advance and is very sound. Howell played a great innings at Horsham, which clearly won the match; and Carter, the captain, showed at the end of the season that he should make plenty of runs in 1924. The great feature of the side was the fielding, which was always good and sometimes brilliant: a side, so inspired, cannot help developing in the other departments of the game.

King's School, Canterbury, had just a fair average side, rather stronger in bowling than in batting. Stonehouse and Brocklehurst bore the brunt of the attack: the latter was the steadier of the two, for Stonehouse after an excellent start rather fell away. In batting St. Croix stood out some way ahead of the rest, and was particularly successful in the school games in which he averaged 49. Toplis played one fine innings of over a hundred, but was otherwise disappointing. Both the two last-named and Mizen are noted as fine fielders. The great need of the side was a bowler of some pace and more solid batting in the middle of the order. In school matches St. Edmunds and St. Lawrence were defeated, Dover and Highgate proved too strong, while the game with Eastbourne was drawn. St. Croix will captain the team next May and will have five old choices to support him.

Dulwich had a young and inexperienced side, and not unnaturally their record works out very modestly: indeed they have only one win to set against eight losses. On the other hand there were not lacking signs of encouragement for the future, especially in the fielding which, when once the weather gave the fieldsmen a chance, was uniformly good. The inexperience of the side was naturally most felt in batting, especially under the anxious conditions of school matches, and only Stark and Musgrave were at all consistently successful. The latter was also a wicket-keeper distinctly above the average. In bowling the captain, Whiteley, was the best, but he was dogged by wretchedly bad fortune: Woodhouse, who bowls slowish and is young, came out with good figures and is considered very promising. With six old colours available next summer, Lewis being the captain, Dulwich will no doubt be able to give a much better account of themselves.

Bedford rather more than held their own with their school rivals, and were a hard-working, hard-fighting side, relying rather on 'good packing and hard shoving' than upon any particular stars outside. They had three steady bowlers of satisfactory variety in Robinson, Proudlock and Reed, and they were backed up by sound fielding. Proudlock did two fine performances with the ball against St. Paul's and Merchant Taylors. Davidson was a brilliant batsman and came out with a really fine record, scoring 50 or more half-a-dozen times, in spite of a hole or two in his defence. Robinson, in addition to his bowling, averaged 28 with the bat and was an excellent cover, so that his value to the side is not far to seek; and there were a number of others who were capable of a useful score and preferred making it when it was most wanted. Finally, Bailey managed the bowling well and was, in general, a capable leader. Fuller will captain the side in the coming season and with four other old choices and a second eleven systematically trained and enthusiastic in the field, he has good material to his hand.

A glance at the Sedbergh bowling averages would seem to belie the information that the weakness of the side lay rather in this than in the batting department, but it is to be remembered that North country wickets, especially in such a year as last, make for low bowling figures, whilst in batting an average of 15 or more takes some earning. Under these conditions Harris' performance of scoring 377 runs and averaging 31 is something well out of the ordinary and marks a great advance upon his form of last year. His 70 against Stonyhurst at a critical stage of the game was very good and probably saved his side from defeat. It was a great misfortune for the side that their captain, J. H. Wood, was prevented by illness from playing in any but a few fixtures, as he was the best all-round cricketer in the side, and even handicapped as he was, put in some useful work. In bowling the bulk of the work fell upon King, fastish, and Scott, slow left; the former was rather erratic and the latter content to rely upon swing rather than spin, but the records of both seem commendable. In school matches Sedbergh defeated Giggleswick comfortably, were beaten by Durham by 25 runs, and played an interesting draw with Stoneyhurst, in which they collapsed badly at the start, recovered, and ended up with honours easy. Wakefield leads next year, and four old choices remain.

Downside were rather an in and out team, or at least this is strongly suggested by their form against Sherborne. In the home match they were very heavily defeated, but at Sherborne they got home by 32 runs in a low-scoring match. This alone is evidence—for Sherborne were a school side above the average—that there were distinct possibilities about the Downish team, a belief that is reinforced by their very good win over the M.C.C., the first in the annals of the school. The batting was fairly strong with Allan and M. J. Turnbull in their very different styles scoring consistently well; but in bowling too much depended upon Quinn, who stuck to his length very well all the year. Van der Straten's slows also met with some success, but the change bowling was very moderate. In school games, apart from the two encounters with Sherborne, Downside were outplayed by the strong Clifton eleven, and drew favourably with Blundell's and Bruton. Allan is captain-elect and will be able to call upon the majority of last year's side.

From Oundle I have received a report full of enthusiasm for the merits and keenness of the team. Unfortunately the school lies somewhat off the beaten track and could therefore only match their powers with one school rival—the Leys, whom they defeated, though playing some way below the form of their club games of which they won five and lost but two, while all but one of the five drawn games were left decidedly in their favour. Quite apart from the evidence of results, I have the testimony of those best acquainted with Oundle cricket to the effect that this was the best side turned out by the school for a quarter of a century, and reflected great credit on those responsible for their coaching, who themselves testify with gratitude to the unremitting interest and enthusiasm of the Headmaster. The batting averages certainly make most convincing reading, Mair and Wykes both topping the half century and scoring a thousand runs between them, and Greenwood, Ireland, Bull, and Harvey all coming out with very good figures. Mair was the most brilliant player on the side and his 246 in under two hours against Lord Lilford's XI must have been worth going a long way to see: but Wykes was the soundest and scored 110, 79 not out, and 80 in consecutive innings. Harvey was the all-rounder of the team, bowling steadily all the season and scoring well; moreover, he captained the side with energy and steadily increasing judgment. Ireland and Cartwright were two very useful fast bowlers; and Reekie's slow spinners often met with success. Harvey will captain the side again this year. Wykes and Mair are again available and with Walters, the stumper, and two others returning Oundle hope to continue in the path of glory.

Leys School had a very long programme of eighteen matches, of which half were drawn, five won, and four lost. They seem to have been very much a team of all-rounders, being blessed with no fewer than seven bowlers of excellent variety who were well handled by the captain, Thompson, and supported by good fielding. Spurr, fast, and Field, medium, were the most successful of a level lot. In batting Carnegie Brown was a really good forcing player, who well earned his trial for Cambridgeshire: after him—but longissimo intervallo—came half-a-dozen others who could all make runs at need, but the collective batting strength was not so great as that of the bowling. Nevertheless it was enough to win for them three out of their four school games, over Bedford, St. Paul's and Felsted.

Felsted were rather a weak side, and could only beat Aldenham in their school games, though they allowed Forest to evade defeat by delaying their own declaration. Their captain, Burton, certainly cannot reproach himself for their lack of success in general, for he did consistently well, scored a splendid century against Essex C. and G., and was altogether in a different class as a batsman from the rest, though Parsons was sound and rather unlucky, and G. Burton is very promising. In bowling Brown took thirty-two wickets for 17 apiece—a similar record to that of last year—but he hardly came on as much as was expected, and in the later matches rather lost his length, probably from over-work. Lintott, on the other hand, steadily improved and Gilbert did good work. Newman was good behind the stumps, and the fielding, especially in the slips, creditable.

Before we pass across the border, mention must be made of Magdalen College School, Oxford, who for the second year in succession had a side so good that its batting was never even seriously put to the test. To account for this one need look no further than the possession of a first-rate pair of bowlers, Bushell and Evans in 1922, and Evans and Clark last season. Evans indeed was a tower of strength, batting splendidly all the year, and averaging 74, besides being an excellent slip field.

From Scotland I have only received two reports—those from Merchiston and Loretto. They, in company with all other cricketers north of the Tweed, suffered terribly from the weather which for a long time was such as to make true cricket almost impossible, and certainly a burden to the flesh. Not unnaturally, therefore, the batting figures make very modest reading indeed, and the fact that the bowlers come out with nothing sensational as a record suggests that the general standard of cricket was low. Loretto drew with both Merchiston and Fettes, but won a thrilling game with Glenalmond, thanks to a courageous stand for the eighth wicket when all seemed lost. Macdonald, their captain, was also their best all-round player, but Dykes was the only really sound bat in the side: the majority on the mud heaps of May and June never learnt the fundamentals and, when the weather changed, the crooked bat could not be made straight. Apart from the captain, the best bowlers were Mitchell and Sanson, but the attack was not strong. It is good, though, to hear that the side as a whole was very keen, and that enthusiasm for cricket runs high in the school. Merchiston had no player of outstanding merit, though Pullar, Milligan, Carr, and Wilson were all fairly consistent. In bowling Mackenzie and Milligan got through a vast amount of work and together took ninety-one wickets, but for Scotland and such a summer, their averages work out rather high.

And so I draw to a close, and nothing remains except to express my warmest thanks to the many kind friends and correspondents, without whose help this review, with all its inadequacies and inaccuracies could never have been written at all. For errors of commission and omission, for failure to do justice to their 'cures' I ask their pardon, and wishing them [and their's the best of seasons in 1924, I humbly take my leave.

ETON v. WINCHESTER.

Played at ETON, Friday, Saturday, June 29, 30.—Despite a brilliant second wicket partnership of 301—a record for the match—between Dawson and Arkwright, Eton could not force a victory. Throughout the game batsmen carried off the honours. After lunch on the first day Sinclair, McGowan and Palmer all punished the Eton bowling rather severely and, every batsmen except one reaching double figures, Winchester appeared to have established a comfortable position. Dawson and Arkwright, however, batted so skilfully that, after the fall of the first Eton wicket at 10, the Winchester bowlers did not meet with further success until the total had reached 311. More enterprising than his partner, Arkwright scored all round the wicket in splendid fashion, his mastery over the bowling being so complete that not until just before he left did he give the semblance of a chance. Dawson, in contrast, played very careful cricket, he was rarely or never at fault. Winchester, 62 behind on the first innings, had gained a lead of 73 when the match had to be given up as a draw.

ETON v. HARROW.

Played at LORD'S, Friday, Saturday, July 13, 14.—Never, perhaps, in the history of the Eton and Harrow match has the bat beaten the ball so completely. In the course of the two days 1,040 runs were scored and only twenty-seven wickets fell. The explanation of this abnormal cricket is quite simple. There was plenty of batting on both sides, but neither team included any bowler of real class, and the wicket was, perhaps, the best of the many excellent ones prepared at Lord's last summer. Moreover, the heat on the first day was almost tropical. Three individual scores of a hundred or more were obtained, and Eton's total of 502 set up a new record for the match, the previous best being 425 by Eton in 1903. One of the best features of the game was Eton's fielding. On winning the toss, Harrow stayed in till about half-past three for a total of 322. The score was even better than it looked on paper, three of the early batsmen, including Stewart-Brown, being run out. These disasters might well have upset a far more experienced eleven, but there was no suggestion of panic. The most successful batting came at the end, Brigstocke, the last man, helping Foster to put on 92 runs. Foster, who fell in the end to a catch at extra cover-point, played in first-rate form, and Brigstocke made fine hits all round the wicket. Dawson and Thursby gave Eton a brilliant start by scoring 111 together, but though the score stood at 171 when the second wicket fell, there were five wickets down at the drawing of stumps for 227. Dawson, not out 95, went on batting the next morning, and found such an admirable partner in Cobbold that 145 runs were added for the seventh wicket. Both batsmen played well, but considering the super-excellence of the wicket and the moderate bowling, they were often very slow. In hitting up his score of 159, Dawson showed great patience and self-control, rarely or never attempting more than he could safely accomplish. He was especially strong in playing off his legs, and now and then he made a good off drive. After Dawson left, Cobbold and Newman added 78 runs together. Cobbold—a boy of only just seventeen—having the distinction of getting a hundred in his first Eton and Harrow match. Newman hit very hard and rarely failed to punish the bad balls, of which, it must be admitted, there were many. Requiring 180 to avoid a single innings defeat, Harrow went in at four o'clock, it having been arranged to continue play if necessary until half-past seven. It is quite possible that Eton would have won the game if Stewart-Brown had not escaped a run out. With three wickets down for 27, the position was almost desperate, but a partnership of 65 runs for the sixth wicket by Stewart-Brown and Bullock made a draw inevitable. Stumps were pulled up at ten minutes past seven, courtesy being stretched a little in allowing Stewart-Brown to get his hundred, after it had become obvious that the match could not be played out. Apart from a sharp chance at slip, Stewart-Brown's innings was almost flawless.

Ninety-four matches have been played, of which Eton have won thirty-nine, Harrow thirty-five, and twenty have been drawn. This is the generally published record, but Harrow men object very strongly to the game in 1805 being treated as a regular contest between the two schools, contending that it is no more correct to count that than the fixture in 1857 which has been rejected.

The one day matches between the two schools during the War are not counted as belonging to the regular series.

Twenty-three three-figure innings have now been played in matches between the two schools, as follows:—

183	D. C. Boles	(in 1904),	Eton	112*	A. W. T. Daniel	(in 1860),	Harrow
173	G. Wilson	(in 1913),	Harrow	108	C. J. Ottaway	(in 1869),	Eton

114	C. P. Foley	(in 1886),	Eton
113	W. F. Forbes	(in 1876),	Eton

In making his 183 Boles set up a new record for the match, beating the 152 obtained in 1841 by Emilius Bayley, afterwards the Rev. Sir John Robert Laurie. Bird in 1907, by scoring 100 not out and 131, performed a feat without precedent in the match.

ETON RAMBLERS v. HARROW WANDERERS.

Played at LORD'S, Monday, Tuesday, July 16, 17.—The Harrow Wanderers had the best of a drawn game, their superiority in bowling, with Falcon and Jameson on the side, being rather marked. It will be seen that, in Bennett, Bagnall, L. G. Crawley and Enthoven, their team included four members of the Cambridge eleven. D. G. Wigan and Wilkinson gave an admirable display of batting for the Ramblers in the last innings.

CLIFTON v. TONBRIDGE.

Played at Lord's, Monday, Tuesday, July, 30, 31.—The first match in a fortnight of school cricket at Lord's had to be left drawn, rain setting in on the second afternoon and preventing a ball being bowled after three o'clock. So far as it went, the play was interesting enough, but in no respect exciting. In running up their first-innings score of 276, the Clifton batsmen were consistent but lacking in enterprise. Williams and Aslett, showed the most attractive form putting on 90 runs together in an hour and a quarter. Holloway was at the wickets for two hours and a quarter and gave no chance. For Tonbridge, T. F. Mitchell—Frank Mitchell's son—played surprisingly well for so young a boy. Not out 41 at the drawing of stumps on Monday, he was run out the next morning after having had two escapes. Clifton had the better side, but scarcely made the most of their opportunities.

RUGBY v. MARLBOROUGH.

Played at LORD'S, Wednesday, Thursday, August, 1, 2.—Securing a substantial advantage on the first day, and having everything their own way afterwards, Marlborough beat Rugby very easily by ten wickets. Their superiority to their rivals as an all-round side was quite obvious. Their batting, though good in a collective sense, was not marked by any individual brilliancy. Six wickets were down in their first innings for 113, and yet the score reached 255, Smith and Harbinson, in a rather uninteresting partnership, putting on 90 runs together. In Rugby's second innings, Hechle made a great effort, staying in for just over two hours, but he received little support. The feature of the match was the quality of the wicket-keeping. Pattison was very good and Abell quite first-rate. The two cover-points—Coleridge for Marlborough and Dawson for Rugby—did brilliant work and earned golden opinions.

CHELTENHAM v. HAILEYBURY.

Played at LORD'S, Friday, Saturday, August, 3, 4.—A keenly-fought game had to be left drawn, Haileybury, at the finish—play on Saturday was carried on until seven o'clock—requiring 64 runs to win with three wickets to fall. They had been left with 188 to get in two hours and, as the first hour's batting produced only 50 runs, victory was out of the question. A belated effort to force the pace made defeat possible, but Hamilton-Smythe played uncommonly well. The game produced some excellent all-round cricket.

LORD'S SCHOOLS v. THE REST.

Played at LORD'S, Monday, Tuesday, August, 6, 7.—The Lord's Schools proved altogether too strong for The Rest, and at half-past four on the second afternoon they won in the easiest fashion by nine wickets. Duleepsinhji, of Cheltenham, was the hero of the game. He played a beautiful innings of 108, completing his hundred in an hour and three-quarters, and in the follow on by The Rest he bowled high-tossed leg-breaks with surprising success, taking five wickets for 41 runs. For the most part, the batting of The Rest was very disappointing, but Holmes hit up a brilliant 83 in an hour and a half, and Blair played well in both innings.

THE ARMY v. PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Played at LORD'S, Wednesday, Thursday, August, 8, 9.—The Public Schools did well to get the Army out on a hard, true wicket for 235, but their own batting went to pieces so completely that, at the end of the first afternoon, they had to follow-on. Dawson kept up a strong defence against good bowling for an hour and three-quarters, being the ninth man out and Duleepsinhji had a brilliant half-hour or so, but that was all. On the second day, the batting was far more consistent, but there never seemed a chance of saving the game. Left with only 106 to get, the Army won by seven wickets, hitting off the runs in an hour and a half.
