

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN 1959

By E. M. WELLINGS

When the pick of the schoolboy players assembled at Lord's for their representative matches, three of them had already played for their counties. Yet 1959 was not to be regarded as a vintage year for Public Schools cricket despite the ideal weather. The clue to a school season is rather to be found in the weather of the previous summer. The fruits of one year ripen in the next, and the 1959 teams were the products of the rain and slush of the so-called summer of 1958. However, the spadework should have been well and truly done to produce something really good in 1960. That was rendered all the more likely by the number of unusually young school sides and the many old Colours remaining for another year. They even include E. J. Craig, who set himself a difficult target for his final school year at Charterhouse by scoring 1,079, the highest aggregate by any boy during the consistently dry and sunny term.

If the general standard of batting and bowling did not qualify for lavish praise, the season to me was outstanding by the reason of the fielding. It is but a short time ago that I was annually writing harsh things about the fielding of the boys. If criticism in these columns played its part in switching attention to this vital branch of the game, it was well worth while. At that time few games masters troubled to refer to fielding in reports on the performances of their school teams. Today few fail to do so, though space does not always permit their reports to appear in full. Some schools, notably Haileybury and Oundle, gave the fielders chief credit for their particularly successful season in 1959.

The show-piece matches at Lord's splendidly illustrated the great improvement that has taken place in recent years. The fielding was excellent, the throwing far, far ahead of what it was as recently as the middle fifties, and by the close of the opening day of the big games particularly fine catches had already been made by the Nawab of Pataudi (Winchester), G. R. Harvey (Blundell's) and C. R. Pilkington (Repton). R. E. F. Minns (King's, Canterbury) and W. A. Sparling (Ampleforth) stood out as top-class fielders, and, though J. Baskervyle Glegg had kept wicket for Eton throughout the term, he did not fall down on the job when required to field in more remote parts for the Southern Schools.

The wicket-keeping in that first game, in which the South were altogether too powerful for The Rest, was alone disappointing. Neither C. J. Saunders (Lancing) nor J. S. Blower (Rossall) rose above ordinary standards, and Baskervyle Glegg became the stumper for the representative Schools XI against Combined Services. Some of those most familiar with the subject considered that M. G. Griffith (Marlborough), the 15-year-old son of S. C. Griffith, was at least as good as any of the wicket-keepers, but wisely he was held back to gather more experience.

The young can learn much from watching and imitating the county players. They should, however, be warned against slavish imitation. What is correct in first-class cricket is not necessarily so in schoolboy play. This applies to the wicket-keepers. In big cricket today they spend much of their time standing back, acting as long-stops even to bowlers of comparatively gentle medium pace. They do so, because they do not expect stumping chances. By going back they not only make more sure of holding the catches but also allow first slip to stand so much wider that, in effect, they give the bowler an extra fielder. In school cricket, however, the stumper is a learner, and he will not develop his talent by doing the job of a long-stop. Even when the ball was old Saunders, at Lord's, stood back to J. S. Raper (Harrow), whose pace did not justify such siting of the wicket-keeper. The standard will improve, I am sure, if the leading boy stumpers are encouraged to learn their trade in a position immediately behind the stumps for all bowlers from medium pace downwards.

Another cautionary piece of advice might concern the throwing, which today is exclusively done full pitch to the wicket-keeper in first-class cricket. Perhaps I should say "is exclusively attempted full pitch," for the wicket-keeper often has to cover much ground to make the catch. The full-pitch throw is excellent when accurate and when effected with a flat trajectory. It is a time-waster if the ball has to be thrown a great height into the air to achieve the necessary distance. Schoolboys, and others, would be well advised not to neglect a flat throw which reaches the wicket on its first long hop. These remarks are not intended as criticism of the throwing by the boys at Lord's. It was good, and near the end of the first of the two games there was a gem of a throw by Sparling, full toss to the stumper with a swallow's trajectory from deep mid-wicket. He was a powerful thrower fully justified in using the full toss route. Inevitably there were other throws which, though accurate enough, travelled so high that alert batsmen would have had time in which to steal extra runs.

The big games at Lord's began unfortunately, with some painstaking batting by The Rest, and an accident which put their best-looking batsman out of action for the remainder of the week. N. M. Stephens (Oundle) had made 19 runs in a style which promised to win him a place in the representative side, when he ricked his back while going for a sharp run. The Rest were subsequently dismissed for 72, and they toiled no less than two and a half hours, during which the Southern Schools fired 57.2 overs at them. There was some early life in the pitch, and some of the bowling was remote from the wicket, but such a scoring rate was quite unworthy. In the schools the boy batsmen had generally made their runs quickly. The games master of Wellington School, Somerset, did indeed complain that "too many potentially good batsmen lost their wickets time and again trying to force from the first ball." A spirit of high adventure apparently was not proof against the historical atmosphere of Lord's. The boys were adversely affected by the occasion.

The play afterwards improved, though The Rest again collapsed after an inspiring second innings by J. L. Cuthbertson (Rugby), and against Combined Services the chosen batsmen performed disappointingly against an attack which should have been within their compass. It may be that the leading players were surfeited with runs. Craig's splendid aggregate was almost matched by those of the Nawab of Pataudi, 1,068 with an average of 71.2, and J. A. Jameson (Taunton), 1,031 at 93.72, while J. M. Brearley, who was not in the teams at Lord's, made 1,015, average 84.58, for City of London School. Others on view at Lord's were also bearing large school averages. R. E. F. Minns averaged 94.77 for King's, Canterbury, from 853 runs. He was one of the three with county experience, the others being Pataudi and M. J. Smith (Enfield Grammar School). Pataudi had enjoyed several games for Sussex, Minns had shown his batting promise in the Kent side, and Smith had played for Middlesex, primarily as a left-arm slow bowler though he was also a strong batsman who hit 77 not out for the Southern Schools.

Unfortunately none of the three did anything outstanding against Combined Services. The Nawab was surely the number one batsman of the school year. There seems nothing wrong with his play that experience will not put right. He is a splendid, natural stroke player, and he will soon learn in first-class cricket not to play across the ball. His fielding, moreover, was something that his fellow countrymen of the Indian touring team would have found useful. His first innings at Lord's must have revived memories among the more senior, for the entry in the scorebook read Nawab of Pataudi, b Woolley 13. His father's idol was Frank Woolley, and to that great player's coaching he attributed the considerable success he himself won in the game. The young Pataudi looks capable of emulating his late father, though, now that India are among the Test playing countries, he can never hope to score a century for England against Australia.

Minns had a disappointing run in the representative games, but his final innings of 39 against the Services revealed his quality. Pataudi and Craig were the only others to reach 30 in either innings of that match. Though far from being powerfully built Craig showed how quickly he could score against the bowling of The Rest. He watched the ball closely, had a compact style and on the basis of good footwork made his attacking strokes confidently. Baskervyle Glegg opened with him for the Public Schools, a batsman well groomed in matches against the strong opposition which Eton meet. The main batting of that side was completed by Cuthbertson and Jameson. For Cuthbertson, Lord's had been an unlucky ground, but he laid his particular bogey most emphatically with an innings of 107 against the Southern Schools. This was a knock of great merit for a side which had previously been outplayed and which had made a second bad start. His methods were eminently sound, and he drove and square cut excellently. Jameson was of similar stamp, a strong fellow who could hit the ball hard and batted with a good, orthodox style.

Apart from Stephens, who was out of action, the best of those batsmen left in reserve appeared to be T. D. Wainwright of Eastbourne, who stepped into The Rest side when Stephens was injured. Though he tended to play across the line of the ball with a bat not quite straight, he helped Cuthbertson in a stand of 100 and played the on-drive, cricket's most difficult stroke, particularly well. Most of the others did not do themselves justice. P. D. Briggs (Pocklington) was excessively cautious and failed twice against the South's bowlers. G. T. Harvey of Blundell's had two brief innings for the other side, and R. M. H. Thomas had apparently exhausted his runs and wickets while doing great things for Rydal. D. E. Costain of Stowe was also disappointing. A batsman who had scored three-quarters of his side's runs to secure an epic victory on his school ground against Oundle must have possessed greater scoring powers than he was willing to put on show at Lord's. One perfect straight drive among much stubborn, tucked-up defensive play hinted at such. Sparling, a batsman with a spirit of adventure, was a curious player. During one over he would give the impression of being a well organised batsman. In the next he would appear thoroughly disorganised. P. J. Kippax, who had headed both batting and bowling averages for Bedford Modern, was another who had apparently used up his ration of success before the representative games.

Kippax was one of several leg-break and googly bowlers, the type for which English cricket was crying out, who did well for their schools. The general standard of spin bowling in the schools as revealed by the boys at Lord's was, however, moderate. For one who had been selected by his county Smith was something of a disappointment. He could bowl his left-arm slows with fair accuracy, but his spin was gentle and his chesty delivery was mechanically lacking in life.

The off-spinners had greater success in the trial game, and the manner of that success increased the impression that half the batsmen in that match played far below their true form. During the second collapse of The Rest, Harvey took four for five in eight overs. Perhaps the unusual sight of a spin bowler polishing the ball on his trousers bewildered his opponents. They played all manner of astonishing strokes. Most of them heard their stumps struck while they were gazing towards the far horizon at mid-wicket, whence they had directed their swipes. Jameson, who had taken four for 16 in the first innings, had a more lively action and looked the more promising off-spinner.

The backbone of the school attack was once again formed by the fast-medium and medium pace bowlers. They were a useful bunch, though most would improve their performance if they would practise their actions to show less chest to the batsman. R. I. Jefferson of Wichester was the pick of the batch. He and A. J. G. Pearson (Downside) were tall young men who made good use of their height. J. S. Raper (Harrow), the third swing bowler against the Services, had no such advantage. His role was rather that of the persistent stock bowler and he performed it well. Behind them were useful reserves. Briggs, who as captain of The Rest used himself sparingly, had the best action of all, and for one of frail build he was decidedly quick. D. Woolley from Manchester Grammar School was lively off the pitch, but his comparative lack of control over length probably deprived him of a place in the representative side.

Bowling tactics of boy players are another feature of the game where slavish imitation of the county cricketers is apt to be crippling. The influence of the county game in the use of split fields, often five on the off-side and four to leg, was obvious. The old maxim was that there are not enough fielders to permit a bowler to attack on both sides of the wicket. He can set an effective field only on one side. The split field inevitably leaves gaps. These are mainly in front of the wicket. Hence the bowler is encouraged to pitch defensively short of a length. Such tactics have been profitably employed by numerous bowlers in first-class cricket, though when batsmen, needing to score extremely fast in the last innings, have asserted themselves, field placings of that order have proved singularly unsuccessful in reducing the scoring rate. For boys, bowling with less accuracy than their seniors, tactics of that sort are more difficult to put into effective practice. The schoolboy bowler needs to learn to bowl accurately to a set field on one side of the wicket. If the seam bowlers feel justified in starting with a field designed to hold close catches on both sides of the wicket, they will benefit by concentrating their forces on one side as soon as the ball loses its first glossy shine.

The greatest mistake is surely made today by the orthodox left-arm spinner. Though he may use an occasional in-swing for variety, that is no reason for wasting fielders on the leg side. England's Test team today would give much for a left-hander able to maintain an accurate, nagging attack on and around the off stump. The necessary accuracy will not be achieved by the bowler who employs a third, and sometimes even a fourth, leg-side fielder to guard against loose balls. The dry pitches of 1959 should have persuaded all such bowlers that the way to success lies primarily in accuracy of length and direction, to which, with experience, variations of flight, pace, direction of attack, by using the width of the crease, and the distance from which the ball is propelled are then to be added. On such pitches even the off-spinner has no good reason for packing the leg side. He would be better employed learning the same arts as the orthodox left-hander, using what little turn he may be able to get from the off to lull the batsman into playing inside the ball that does not turn or even moves a little the other way.

Winchester again qualified for early mention among the top school sides. They suffered—if that is a permissible word in such circumstances—their first defeat by a school since 1954, and the manner of defeat reflected as much honour on their players as on the victorious Harrovians. They were beaten by a single run after one of the many fine innings which their captain, the Nawab, played for them during the term. His side won nine and lost only two matches, and the figures clearly indicate how much they owed to him. His own average was 71, against 26 by the runner-up, and his aggregate was the largest ever accumulated for the school in one summer. Eton similarly thrived on the batting of their openers, Baskervyle Glegg and A. C. E. Robinson, and cricket at Harrow was clearly on the upgrade.

Haileybury, the fielding experts, were one of the most formidable sides, winning four of their six inter-school matches and losing only to Wellington. Clifton were clearly the leading side in the west, where they won four inter-school matches and drew the other two. Like Eton they were blessed by successful openers, A. R. Windows and J. R. Stephens, each of whom scored two centuries. Oundle were another fine side against other schools, and in all their 16 matches they lost only once. Radley also continued to deal faithfully with school opponents, none of whom has succeeded against them in three years. In the north St. Peter's, York, had a similar record. Worksop lost only two of 16 matches, Mill Hill left only one of 14 unfinished, and Shrewsbury joined those who gave much credit for a successful season to their fielders. In Wales Llandovery had their best term for many years, and the credit went largely to their excellent opening bowlers, P. Mostyn

Davies and D. N. Stimson. Together they took 91 wickets for 811. Scotland's most successful teams were Merchiston Castle, with only one defeat in 15 games, and Loretto, who won 10 of their 15. A. R. Reid, who was reported to be unusually fast for a schoolboy bowler, took 74 at merely 6.75 each for Loretto. Merchiston prospered from the consistent all-round play of D. R. C. Morton. In the past five seasons only two schools have managed to lower their colours.

There was report of other emphatically fast bowlers. Three of them were in Kent. G. C. Pritchard, bowling at exceptional pace for King's, Canterbury, took 49 wickets at 11.57 each, M. P. M. Watson 34 at 16.05 for St. Lawrence, Ramsgate, and P. W. Sayer of Kent College had 45 at 5.2 each and a couple of hat-tricks. Other bowling performances worthy of special mention include M. Kirkman's 59 scalps for Dulwich, a total exceeded only by two Dulwich cricketers, A. E. R. Gilligan and T. E. Bailey. An exceptionally large bag was that of D. I. Yealsley, who took 86 wickets at microscopic cost and also headed the Exeter School batting averages. It was hardly surprising that Exeter won 14 out of 17 matches.

The fastest century recorded by a schoolboy was the 101 by Minns in sixty-two minutes against the Band of Brothers. J. A. Edgar hit 100 in eighty-nine minutes for Perse against Bishop's Stortford. Jameson and Brearley each made five centuries for their schools. Several sides batted with splendid enterprise, and there was clearly no cause to doubt that cricket was being played in the right spirit in the schools. It was to be hoped that the young players would not afterwards become unduly influenced by the defensive ideas rife in senior cricket. Above all they should not allow themselves to indulge in those time-wasting practices which, since the war, have reduced the tempo of first-class cricket by anything up to, and even beyond, 30 overs a day. The 57.2 overs in two and a half hours by the Southern Schools at Lord's was the sort of pre-war rate which the boys should aim to maintain in senior cricket.

The finish this year must necessarily be on a sad note, recording the end of the ancient Mercer's School in London. Their games master wrote to say that there could be no inclusion of Mercer's School results in Wisden. The numbers for the last term in the school's history had been reduced to 30, and the cricket team played their matches against third elevens of other schools. Their rivals carry on and after the glorious summer of 1959 could hope to attain new cricketing standards in 1960.

ALDENHAM SCHOOL

The season proved disappointing, mainly because the all-spin attack was unsuited to hard pitches. Among the batsmen M. J. Catchpole, a well-built left-hander, developed well. Z. H. Hidayatallah, from Pakistan, stood out as a left-arm spin bowler.

In his third season as captain M. J. Edwards batted and bowled particularly well. The batting was uncertain, but the bowling with the brothers Coulson bowling fast and effectively was responsible for a reasonably successful season.

AMPLEFORTH COLLEGE

A particularly young side strong in batting owed their success largely to the three seniors W. A. Sparling, J. J. Brennan and A. J. King. Seven of the side played innings exceeding 60 and were supported by a varied attack. The fielding was good and Sparling so outstanding as to be rated perhaps the best fielder the College has ever had.

After an unbeaten term's cricket in 1958, Ashville had yet another good season, with several close and exciting finishes. The batting was unreliable, but the combination of left-arm leg-breaks from T. J. Elsworth and off-breaks from C. M. Davies was often a match-winner. I. W. Murdoch showed considerable promise as a wicket-keeper.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE

The side, strongly founded on all-rounders, were unbeaten, though on perfect pitches many matches were left drawn. R. W. Lewis perhaps suffered as a batsman from having more bowling to do, though his all-round record was still imposing. D. J. Lock at number five was a splendidly consistent scorer.

All inter-school matches produced definite results, three being won and two lost. E. J. Craig, who exceeded 1,000 runs, and J. J. Ullman, an all-rounder, had outstanding seasons. M. C. After a slow start, during which three inter-school matches were lost in a week, the side improved, and, headed by Prain and Caplan, the batting was good. CHRIST'S HOSPITAL

The XI had a good season, losing only to three club sides. The batting was competent if never realising its full potentiality, and a lively, varied attack, supported by good catching and keen fielding, contributed largely to impressive wins against Dulwich College, Eastbourne College, Cranleigh School and St. John's, Leatherhead.

CRANLEIGH SCHOOL

A disappointing season was due largely to the unexpected weakness of the batting against spin. The side relied excessively on C. F. E. Latham and C. R. Williamson both for runs and wickets, and the close catching was weak. The team, however, were unusually young, and eight of them will still be at school in 1960.

DOWNSIDE SCHOOL

Downside depended very much upon their captain, A. J. G. Pearson, an outstanding schoolboy cricketer, who bowled fast out-swingers, was a fine straight-hitting batsman, and an excellent close-to-the-wicket fielder. He was well supported by Sadler, a left-arm slow bowler. Barrington was a young player of great promise, making over 300 runs and taking 21 wickets.

DULWICH COLLEGE

Though M. Kirkman, the captain, welded his players into a good fielding side, they lacked the experience to achieve anything but a moderate record. Kirkman's 59 wickets were more than any taken in a season since T. E. Bailey's 66 in 1942, but the rest of the bowling was undistinguished and the middle batting unreliable.

T. D. Wainwright was the outstanding cricketer in a side whose season was more enjoyable than prosperous. He scored centuries against Eastbourne and Lancing. I. G. Thwaites continued to show considerable promise as an all-rounder, and P. J. Colbourne was a most useful opening bowler.

ETON COLLEGE

Blessed with an excellent opening pair, J. Baskervyle-Glegg and A. C. E. Robinson, the team's batting was reliable. It contained a highly promising 15-year-old all-rounder, P. Wigan; a bold hitter at number five, M. L. Dunning; and a lively tail headed by A. R. Wagg. The fielding was excellent, but the attack was inconsistent, though R. D. Christie was perseveringly accurate at medium pace. The team enjoyed a good start and finish divided by an unsuccessful middle period.

FELSTED SCHOOL

The batting did not live up to expectations. P. R. Hunter alone looked capable of dictating play, but had his limitations. HAILEYBURY AND I.S.C.

During a successful season four of the six school matches were won. The batting was strong right down the order, with D. Moeller, M. Maslin and R. J. Swannell the most consistent scorers. HARROW SCHOOL

Harrow, after losing four times in May, had a good June, in which Winchester—by one run—Charterhouse and Malvern were beaten. A team without any really outstanding performer played attractive, exciting cricket. Runs were scored at a good rate, and the side had the spirit to fight back after making a poor start. D. R. J. Foster developed an excellent fielding and throwing combination that worked well together. The team batted in depth and the attack contained three good seam bowlers—B. S. Raper, M. J. H. Weedon and J. C. S. Nieboer.

The earlier batting was inconsistent but was redeemed by good performances by later batsmen, notably MacGregor and Holland. Attwell played some fine innings at number three. The bowling proved steady, and A. D. Dowlen, a most competent wicket-keeper, captained the eleven well.

HURSTPIERPOINT COLLEGE

This was a disappointing season though the XI made more runs than for many years. C. Hodgkins was a dependable opening bat, as was J. M. Waterfall, but the later batting often failed to take advantage of their good partnerships. The bowling lacked fire on the hard pitches, but as both openers, Welch and Stiff, were Colts they should be a force in 1960.

THE KING'S SCHOOL, CANTERBURY

R. E. F. Minns, with four centuries, was quite outstanding and scored his runs at a very fast pace. Against Dover College he made 153 not out in eighty-nine minutes, and his 101 not out against the Band of Brothers came in sixty-two minutes. Fast bowler G. C. Pritchard had a splendid action and promised to become really first-class. C. R. Barber was another batsman of great promise who scored two centuries.

LEEDS GRAMMAR SCHOOL

A very inexperienced side enjoyed a satisfactory season, thanks largely to their determination in the field under the captaincy of G. R. C. Yeadon. The batting depended overmuch on the left-handers, J. T. Sleightholme and Yeadon. The fast-medium bowlers, D. L. Oliver and S. R. Cowie, shouldered the bowling burden. Late in the season they were well supported by N. Grindlay, a leg-breaker.

THE LEYS SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE

The Leys experienced a better season than anticipated. Five inter-school matches were won, three drawn very favourably, and only one lost—to the powerful Oundle side. The out-cricket was alert and purposeful under Munjee's able leadership. M. C. M. Thorpe was a dangerous medium-pace bowler on his day.

MALVERN COLLEGE

A young eleven achieved good victories against M.C.C., Free Foresters and the Authentics, but won only one school match, against Cheltenham. M. C. Bailey put up some fine performances as an all-rounder, while B. A. Richardson improved steadily as an opening bat and showed promise as a leg-spinner. G. H. REPTON SCHOOL

Repton were less successful than of late because the bowlers failed to adapt themselves to the firm pitches. Apart from P. W. S. Rowland who had been impressive on the wet surfaces of 1958, the other bowlers did comparatively little. They were further handicapped by dropped catches. Moreover the batting depended too much on C. R. Pilkington and R. A. Hutton. The others were prone to collapse.

ROSSALL SCHOOL

Good batting and excellent fielding in support of a steady rather than penetrative attack, in which A. T. W. Hale thrived on hard work, produced a satisfactory season. Of the main scorers A. M. Robertson in successive innings made 84 not out against St. Bees in sixty-five minutes and 129 in two hours ten minutes against Shrewsbury. The most consistent batsman was P. D. R. Brown who only twice failed to reach double figures.

RYDAL SCHOOL

Rydal's season was notable for the fine all-round play of R. M. H. Thomas, a free and confident stroke player and a bowler relying mainly on well-concealed changes of pace. He was also a fine fielder and was rated as the best all-rounder the school has ever produced. D. E. Morphy had a curious season, scoring only 19 runs in his first seven innings and nearly 400 in his remaining eight.

ST. EDWARD'S SCHOOL

After a great start to the season the team fell off disappointingly. The start included the first win ever against M.C.C. A. Maclachlan lacked only confidence in himself to be an outstanding cricketer, being a splendid bat, a beautiful fielder and a quickish, if erratic, opening bowler. The opening pair, D. G. Davies and R. W. O. Howell, scored 181 together against Bradfield, a school record. R. L. Best, a leg-break bowler with genuine spinning ability aged only 15, had outstanding successes against school sides.

High scores attractively made gave the College a successful season under the good captaincy of D. C. L. Prior, who was a fine attacking batsman at number three. Newcomers C. J. C. Three of the main batsmen, E. T. Razzall, R. Q. East and P. G. Cummings were under 16 at the start of the term, which fact augured well for the future. Consistent batting by the first five and splendid fielding were the main causes of Shrewsbury's success. The bowlers collectively were not a great force, but they enjoyed individual successes, and J. WINCHESTER COLLEGE

Under the able captaincy of the Nawab of Pataudi the team enjoyed another successful season. The first defeat by another school since 1954 was suffered by only one run and off the last ball of the match with Harrow. Pataudi's 1,068 runs surpassed the previous best for Winchester, the 997 of D. R. Jardine in 1919. The side owed much to him and to the fine bowling of R. I. Jefferson, the captain for 1960.

WYCLIFFE COLLEGE

The fast bowling of N. J. Treadaway and the leg-breaks of D. W. Lewis were the basis for an outstandingly successful season. The only defeat was by 15 runs at the hands of Manchester Grammar School. Lewis also developed into an aggressive stroke player and he headed the batting averages.

Owing to illness the Bradfield College details arrived too late for classification.

BRADFIELD COLLEGE

Bradfield enjoyed a successful season. Both M.C.C. and Free Foresters were beaten in high-scoring matches. George and Reid, the leading batsmen, were well supported by Davison, Stevens and Murphy and the attack proved adequate with Banks, Davis and Stevens sharing most of the bowling. The fielding reached a good standard and Murphy kept wicket excellently.

PUBLIC SCHOOL MATCHES IN 1959

HARROW v. WINCHESTER

At Harrow, June 9. This remarkable match ended in a win for Harrow by one run off the last ball of the game. Harrow, after losing their first four wickets for 34, fought back to reach 175, but with twenty minutes left for play Winchester appeared to be heading for victory, needing only 31 runs in twenty minutes. Then Pataudi, who drove strongly in his innings of 95, fell to the first of several fine catches, which, had they been dropped, would have cost Harrow the match. So with only time for one more over, Winchester needed six runs with two wickets to fall. Four runs came from the second ball, but Winchester lost their ninth wicket to a fine catch at mid-off off the fourth ball. No runs came from the fifth, and Weedon, with the last ball, produced a straight, good-length delivery which completely beat and bowled Dinwiddy.

SHREWSBURY v. REPTON

At Shrewsbury, June 16. Shrewsbury won by three wickets. Repton never established a mastery over the Shrewsbury bowlers, although Pilkington and Tomlinson punished the loose ball severely. Set to score 150, Ker and Wright gave Shrewsbury a good start with a fine second-wicket partnership of 73. The lively Rowland dismissed several of the later batsmen cheaply but some hard hitting by Wallace and Penn took Shrewsbury to victory.

WINCHESTER v. ETON

At Winchester, June 26, 27. Drawn. Eton made a moderate start, losing five wickets for 102, but Dunning and Wagg, playing soundly, took them to the respectable total of 216. Although Pataudi used his strokes freely, Winchester never looked confident against the lively Eton bowlers, but a well-hit innings of 49 by Daniels on the second day saved them from serious trouble. A good fourth-wicket partnership of 52 between Dunning and Milne enabled Eton to declare and leave Winchester to score 222 runs to win in seventy-two minutes. Then Pilkington, with a fine spell of pace bowling, brought about the downfall of Patrick, Pataudi and Jefferson and Winchester were forced to concentrate on defence to avoid defeat.

AMPLEFORTH v. WORKSOP

At Ampleforth, June 27. Worksop won by five wickets. Ampleforth began well, Sparling and Butcher playing with confidence, but the later batsmen failed. Although Brennan and Wetherell bowled accurately, Worksop were never really troubled. Newton, especially, batted with tremendous zest for his 94 not out.
